Applying the principles set forth in these paragraphs we find ourselves unable to hold that there is any repugnancy between the provision requiring permission of the Local Govt. to a sale of ancestral property and the provisions whereby the Deputy Commissioner executes a decree under the U. P. Regulation of Sales Act. It is true that it does not appear at what stage the permission of the Local Govt. is to be obtained, but it would seem to be obvious that permission must be taken after the valuation has been carried out. That is the view which has been taken by the learned Members of the Board of Revenue of this province in Mst. Rajdei v. Chhama Nath (1937 R. D. 269) (1), and again in Raghoraj Singh v. Sheo Shankar Lal (1937 O. W. N. 1167) (2). Learned Counsel urges that the view of the learned Members of the Board of Revenue, which is of course not binding on this Court, is also unsound, but we are not prepared to accept that view. It was contended in the second of these two cases that s. 20 of the Oudh Laws Act was passed in order to prevent properties from being sold in the public auction at an absurdly low price, and this consideration could not apply to the transfer of the land at an inflated rate fixed by the Govt. but, as the learned Junior Member remarked:

"Government are entitled to be assured that the valuation has been properly carried out and their sanction has to be applied for before the land can be sold."

(1) 1937 R D 269.

(2) (1937) O. W. N. 1167.

We could not hold that his view is unsound unless we were first prepared to hold that the provisions of the Regulation of Sales Act are repugnant to those of the Oudh Laws Act. The provisions of the earlier Act are capable of being combined with the provisions of the latter Act, and the mere fact that the provisions of s. 5 of the Regulation of Sales Act have a mandatory tone does not seem to us to exclude the application of s. 20 of the Oudh Laws Act. We are clearly of opinion that the permission of the Local Govt. was necessary to complete the sale or transfer in favour of Hargobind Prasad, and it was rightly held by the learned Additional Special Judge that as that permission had not obtained, the transfer of August 22, 1935, was without effect and did not confer a title on Hargobind Prasad claimant-objector.

As regards the second point raised on behalf of the respondent, namely that the transfer was only effected by the issue of sale certificate on November 2, 1935, and that that transfer was subsequent to the application under the Encumbered Estates Act made on October 12, 1935, and the order under s. 6 of that Act was passed on the same day, and was therefore to be treated as null and void, the learned Counsel has referred us to a case reported in 1938 A. L. J. R 541 [Sheo Baran Singh v. Ranbir Prasad] (3), in which it was held that the order of transfer preceding the application under the Encumbered Estates Act did not constitute a transfer, and a sale deed and dakhl which took place after the application under the Encumbered Estates Act were to be set aside in view of the provisions of s. 7 of the Encumbered Estates Act, and therefore the decree and the debt which were intended to be satisfied by that transfer continued to subsist. In that particular case the order of transfer was differently worded from the present case and something might have been founded on that fact. We are, however, of opinion that this is a point which does not arise for decision in the present case in view of our finding on the first point argued before us, and we, therefore, make no pronouncement upon it.

In view of our finding on the first point argued, we hold that the claim of Hargobind Prasad under s. 11 of the Encumbered Estates Act was rightly dismissed. There is no force in the present appeal which accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 31, 57—Official Assignee establishing that transaction within contemplation of s. 57 took place after commencement of insolvency—Onus to prove that it took before adjudication.

Under the doctrine of "relation back" the property of an insolvent on the making of the order of adjudication vests in the Official Assignee as from the commencement of the insolvency, that is to say, from the date of the act of insolvency upon which the adjudication is made. As from that date the insolvent ceases to be owner of the property and cannot deal with it. He cannot make payments to creditors or give good and valid discharges. Section 57 of the Presi. Towns Insol. Act, however, provides an exception to the doctrine by affording protection to bona fide transactions taking place between the commencement of the insolvency and the date of the order of adjudication in those cases where the person with whom such transaction takes place had no notice of the presentation of the petition by or against the debtor. When the Official Assignee has established that a transaction within the contemplation of s. 57 took place after the commencement of the insolvency, the onus lies on the person seeking to uphold the transaction to prove that it took place before adjudication and that he had no notice of the presentation of the petition. A denial in the objections filed by him is insufficient to discharge the onus. The objections are mere pleadings. 143 Ind. Cas. 628 (2), 138 Ind. Cas. 622 (3), 158 Ind. Cas. 361 (4), In re Matanle, Ex parte Schulte (5) and In re Tolle Mache, Ex parte Revell (6), relied on.

Mr. Kundanmal Dayaram, for the Applicant.

Mr. Khanchand Gopaldas, for the Opponent.

Order.—This is an application by the Official Assignee under s. 7, Presi. Towns Insol. Act, to adjudge a payment of Rs. 500 by the Insolvent Santram Bhagwandas to the opponent firm of Dhanomal Mohanlal, null and void and to direct the latter to refund to the Official Assignee the said sum with interest. The firm of Issardas Srigopal and one of its partners Santram Bhagwandas were adjudged insolvent on August 25, 1937, on a petition by certain creditors filed on October 14, 1936. The date of the act of insolvency on which the adjudication was based was October 8, 1936. It is stated in the Official Assignee's application that on July 1, 1937, the insolvent Santram Bhagwandas made the payment of Rs. 500 to the opponents in full satisfaction of two decrees for Rs. 437 and Rs. 403, respectively obtained against the insolvent firm at Amritsar. The dates of these decrees have not been mentioned. The opponents have not appeared in person. They have contended themselves with filing certain objections to the application of the Official Assignee and these objections are not supported by affidavit.

It is not disputed by the opponents, vide para. 2 of the objections filed by them, that the said payment to them of Rs. 500 was made on July 1, 1937, that is to say, considerably after the filing of the insolvency petition though before the order of adjudication. The learned Advocate for the opponents contended that his clients had at the time of the payment no notice of the presentation of the petition and that the transaction was a bona fide one. He, therefore, relied on s. 57, Presi. Towns Insol. Act, as affording him protection. The proviso to this section reads:

"Provided that any such transaction takes place before the date of the order of adjudication, and that the person with whom such transaction takes place has not at the time notice of the presentation of any insolvency petition by or against the debtor."

The learned Advocate argued that the onus lay on the Official Assignee to establish that the opponents had notice of the presentation of the petition and that the transaction was not bona fide and unless that onus was discharged, his clients were entitled to succeed. In developing this line of argument, the learned Advocate said that it was unreasonable, generally speaking, to expect any creditor to establish a negative, that is to say, that he had not received notice. At first sight there may appear some logical basis for this contention, but the flaw in the argument becomes apparent on a consideration of the relevant principles of bankruptcy law. It is elementary that under the doctrine of "relation back" the property of an insolvent on the making of the order of adjudication vests in the Official Assignee as from the commencement of the insolvency, that is to say, from the date of the act of insolvency upon which the adjudication is made. As from that date the insolvent ceases to be owner of the pro-party and cannot deal with it. He cannot make payments to creditors or give good and valid discharges. As was stated by Fletcher Moulton, L. J. in Ponsford Baker & Co. v. Union of London and Smiths Bank, Ltd. (1).

"Nothing is more firmly established in bankruptcy law than that a man who has committed an act of bankruptcy is not entitled to deal with his estate. He has no right to gather it in if it is not already in his hands or to make payments to his creditors out of that which he has actually at his command."

Under the Presi. Towns Insol. Act, the doctrine of "relation back" is set forth in s. 51. Section 57 of the Act, however, provides an exception to the doctrine by affording protection to bona fide transactions taking place between the commencement of the insolvency and the date of the order of adjudication in those cases where the person with whom such transaction takes place had no notice of the presentation of the petition by or against the debtor. Section 57 is of course subject always to the provisions of the Act with respect to the effect of insolvency on an execution and with respect to the avoidance of certain transfers and preferences. Under the principles laid down in the Evli. Act the burden of proving those facts, proof of which is necessary to bring a transaction within the protection afforded by s. 57 would clearly lie on the person who relied upon the protection, because in the absence of such proof the transaction would be void by reason of the doctrine of "relation back." I would say therefore that when the Official Assignee has established that a transaction within the contemplation of s. 57 took place after the commencement of the insolvency, the onus lies on the person seeking to uphold the transaction to prove that it took place before adjudication and that he had no notice of the presentation of the petition. In Nanackchand Ramanand v. Official Receiver (2) under the Pro. Insol. Act it was held that 'persons claiming the benefit of the proviso must show that they had no notice of the presentation of the insolvency petition.' The decision in Dharamdas Thawardas v. F. O. Hukamchand Mirimal (3) also under the Pro. Insol. Act was to the same effect. This latter case was followed by the Rangoon

High Court in Secretary of State v. S. C. Niyogi (4) where the Crown relied upon the proviso to s. 57 to protect a mortgage in its favour. In the course of the judgment, Dunklev, J., said:

"The learned District Judge has rightly held that if the Crown wished to rely upon the protection given by s. 55, Pro. Insol. Act, for bona fide transactions prior to the date of the order of adjudication, it was the duty of the Crown to have pleaded the protection of that section and further the burden was upon the Crown to show that at the time of the transaction in question, it had no notice of the presentation of an insolvency petition."

The English cases in In re Matanle, Ex parte Schulte (5) and In re Tolle Mache, Ex parte Revell (6) establish the same principle. In this particular case it is admitted that the payment in question was prior to adjudication and the only point that remains is as to whether the opponents have discharged the onus of proving that they had no notice of the presentation of the insolvency petition. I am prepared to agree with the learned Advocate for the opponents that sometimes it would only be possible to prove that no notice had been received by a bare denial on the point and in the absence of circumstances indicating that the denial is false, it should prevail. In this case, however, the opponents are not present in Court to say that they did not receive notice of the presentation of the petition and they have filed no affidavit on the point. A denial in the objections filed by them is insufficient to discharge the onus. The objections are mere pleadings. I hold, therefore, that the opponents have failed to establish that they had no notice of the presentation of the petition.

In view of this conclusion, it is not strictly necessary to consider the matter further, but having heard arguments in full, I would add that taking all the circumstances into consideration, I consider the opponents must have had notice of the filing of the petition and that the transaction was not bona fide. Both parties reside and carry on business as merchants at Amritsar and although the adjudication was at Karachi, it is in the highest degree unlikely that the opponents would not learn of the adjudication. The news of an insolvency rapidly circulates and there is considerable business connection between Amritsar and Karachi. The opponents

The insolvents were served with notice of the petition for adjudication on January 22, 1937, and the payment was made on July 1, over six months later. I hold that the payment of Rs. 500 to the opponents is void as against the Official Assignee, and I order the opponents, to refund the said sum to the Official Assignee together with interest at 6 per cent. from July 1, 1937, till date of payment, and I further direct the opponents to pay the costs of the application.

Order accordingly.

O. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 157 (3)—Sadar-lambardar paying land revenue due of mortgagor's land, whether gets priority over mortgagee—Sale by him, effect of.

When the land revenue in respect of mortgagor's land has been paid by the sadar-lambardar, he gets priority over the mortgagee, standing in the shoes of the Govt. to the extent of the land revenue paid by him. He can accordingly sell the land giving to the purchaser a like priority unless the mortgagee redeems this charge by payment. But the sale is not free from incumbrance. [p. 783, col. 1.]

S. O. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Damoh, dated February 29, 1936.

Mr. R. S. Dabir with Mr. R. G. Pande, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Adhikari, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal raises an interesting point of law under the Land Revenue Act. The appellant is the mortgagee of a part of the village Nimarmunda which is divided up into a number of pattis. The sadar lambardar of the village was called upon to pay land revenue in respect of the village including the patti belonging to the mortgagor. At all material times the mortgagor had ceased to be interested in the land because he had been sued by his mortgagee and a preliminary and later a final decree had been passed against him. In that state of affairs the sadar-lambardar paid the land revenue due in respect of the mortgagor's patti.

Next the sadar-lambardar sold the mortgagor's patti under the powers conferred upon him by s. 157 of the Land Revenue Act.

Section 157 provides inter alia as follows:—

"(1) Any sadar-lambardar.....who has paid any land revenue due by any proprietor... may, within six months from the date of such payment, apply in writing to the Deputy Commissioner to recover the amount on his behalf ...

(3) The Deputy Commissioner... may proceed to recover, as if it were an arrear of land revenue, such amount, with costs and interest, from the person held by him to be liable for the same."

Thus it will be seen that a sadar-lambardar can ask the Deputy Commissioner to proceed to recover the amount that he has paid on behalf of the patti in a particular mode.

Where land revenue is unpaid to Govt., Govt. may sell the defaulter's land in order to recover the land revenue due... If it does so sell the land, (there are many other ways indicated in s. 128 of realizing land revenue), the purchaser acquires that land free from incumbrances as a consequence of the provisions of s. 138 (1).

Before we come to that section, we observe that under s. 122 the land revenue is made a first charge. The provision is as follows:

"122 (1). The land revenue assessed on an estate, mahal or land, and any sum payable under a sub-settlement shall, notwithstanding any partition, be a first charge on the estate, mahal or land to which it relates, and on the rents or profits thereof."

Returning now to s. 138 it is provided that

"unless the Deputy Commissioner in ordering the sale otherwise directs the purchaser of any estate, mahal, share or land sold for arrears of land revenue due in respect thereof, shall acquire it free of all incumbrances imposed on it, and all grants and contracts made in respect of it, by any person other than the purchaser."

We now turn to s. 128 which details the various modes in which the arrears payable to Govt. may be recovered. The ones that have been referred to in the arguments are:

"(f) by selling such estate, mahal or land, or the share or land of any co-sharer who has not paid the portion of the land revenue which, as between him and the other co-sharers, is payable by him," and

"(g) by attaching and selling immovable property belonging to the defaulter other than the land in respect of which the arrear has accrued."

It will thus be seen that Govt. may sell the land for arrears of land revenue, and if the arrears of land revenue are due in respect of the land that is sold, that land is sold free from incumbrances unless the Deputy Commissioner otherwise directs.

The Act also provides that if the sadar-lambardar pays the land revenue due in respect of land belonging to a co-sharer, he may, through the Deputy Commissioner recover the sum that he has paid on behalf of the co-sharer as if it were an arrear of land revenue. The question is: Does that relate to a mode or does it also relate to incidents? In other words: Does s. 157 (3) merely describe the machinery whereby the sadar-lambardar can recover the amount of revenue that he has paid on behalf of another or does it also provide that if the machinery is put into operation and the sale of land takes place, the land sold (the land of the mortgagor in this case), that is to say, the land in respect of which the land revenue was paid, is sold free from incumbrances?

The effect of provisions of this kind in other Acts has been considered in a number of cases. In Liquidator, Yedha Society v. Pragdas (1) the question turned on the wording of s. 225 (d) of the Land Revenue Act, which provides that "any sum ordered by a liquidator appointed under sub-s. (1) of s. 42 of the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912, to be recovered as a contribution to the assets of a society or as the cost of liquidation.... may be recovered under this Act in the same manner as an arrear of land revenue."

It was held that this provision related to the mode in which the amount due could be recovered. The sale was not free from incumbrance.

This kind of case is distinguishable from the present one because it may well be said that the expression "in the same manner" is not the same as the words "as if", the former phrase relating more clearly to the mode in which the money may be recovered. It was indicated in Chinnasami Mudali v. Tirumalai Pillai (2), however, that such difference in phrase is not important.

In Ramchandra v. Pitchaikanni (3) the question arose under the Abkari Act and it was held that where land is sold under the provisions of s. 10 of the Madras Abkari Act, 1864, for arrears due by an Abkari renter, the purchaser at the sale does not take the land free from incumbrances as in the case of a sale for arrears of land revenue under the provisions of the Revenue Recovery Act. Their Lordships observe at p. 435*, after having considered the provisions of the Revenue Recovery Act, as follows:

"Taking these sections together, the intention is clear that the purchase is free of prior encumbrances only when the arrear is of public revenue of which the land is the first security; by statutory declaration. By s. 10 of the Abkari Act, it is enacted that Collectors may proceed against Abkari renters or other persons licensed under that Act for the recovery of arrears due by them in like manner as for the recovery of arrears of land revenue.... The expression 'In like manner as for the recovery of arrears of land revenue' indicates only that the same procedure is to be followed.... Arrear of Abkari revenue is not due upon any specific land owned by the Abkari renter...."

It was accordingly held that the land, when sold, would not be free from incumbrances.

Chinnasami Mudali v. Tirumalai Pillai (2) was a case under the Land Improvement Loans Act, s. 7 (1) (a). As will be seen below there has been made a distinction between cases under s. 7 (1) (a) and s. 7 (1) (c). It is desirable to set out these two clauses. They are as follows:

"7. (1) Subject to such rules as may be made under s. 10, all loans granted under this Act, all interest (if any) chargeable thereon and costs (if any) incurred in making the same, shall, when they become due, be recoverable by the Collector in all or any of the following modes, namely:—

(a) from the borrower as if they were arrears of land revenue due by him;

(c) out of the land for the benefit of which the loan has been granted—as if they were arrears of land revenue due in respect of that land;...

It will be seen that there is a broad distinction between (a) and (c) though both give power to recover (as if they were arrears of land revenue). But (a) is "as if they were arrears of land revenue due by him", and (c) is "as if they were arrears of land revenue due in respect of that land".

In Chinnasami Mudali v. Tirumalai Pillai (2), it was held that when the land was sold under the provisions of cl. 1 (a), it was sold subject to incumbrances. In Sankaran Nambudripad v. Ramaswami Ayyar (4) on the other hand, it was held that when the land was sold under the provisions of s. 7, cl. 1 (c), it was sold free from incumbrances. Ayling, J. observes at p. 693†:

"A comparison of the various cls. (a), (b), (c) and (d) shows that the framers of the Land Improvement Loans Act considered that there was some substantial difference between a sale for arrears of land revenue of the land on which the arrears accrued and a sale for the same purpose of other lands whether belonging to the defaulter or some one else."

Sunkaran Nambudripad v. Ramaswami Aiyar (4) was followed in Secretary of State for India v. Narinath (5) which was another case under the Land Improvement Loans Act, s. 7 (1) (c).

In Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Ayyar (6) the sale was under the powers conferred by the Income Tax Act II of 1886. By s. 30 of that Act the Collector is empowered, in default of payment of the tax, to recover the amount as if it were an arrear of land revenue. In that case the Collector proceeded to recover the amount as if it were an arrear of land revenue. It was held that s. 30 of the Income Tax Act had not the effect of converting income-tax into an arrear of land revenue due in respect of the land which may be brought to sale for realisation of the income-tax but that its effect was to extend the procedure prescribed by (Madras) Act II of 1864 and (India) Act I of 1890, to the recovery of arrears of income-tax. In other words, the land was sold subject to incumbrances.

In Ibrahim Khan Sahib v. Rangaswami Naicken (7) the case was one of sale for arrears of Abkari revenue. The words were "as if they were arrears of land revenue" and it was held that they had the same meaning as the words "in like manner as for the recovery of arrears of land revenue" and accordingly only the mode and not the incidents was applied and the sale was subject to incumbrance. In R. M. V. V. M. Chettyar Firm v. M. Subramaniam (8) the Madras cases were reviewed. That case arose under the City of Rangoon Municipal Act where the relevant provision uses the words "as if they were arrears of land revenue". It was decided that the question whether the sale had the same consequence as a sale for arrears of land revenue due in respect of the land sold depended on the nature of the tax for which the sale was effected. At p. 464* the learned Judge relying on Sankaran Nambudripad v. Ramaswami Ayyar (4) observes as follows:

"This ruling shows that the words 'as if they were arrears of land revenue' do not by itself (sic) show that the intention of the Legislature was merely to regulate the procedure to be followed in such cases and that whether it was intended to attract also the provision relating to the substantive right of a purchaser depends upon a consideration of the wording of the Act and the nature of the tax. This is made clear in the judgment of Mr Justice Seshagiri Aiyar at p. 698* where, after referring to the passage in Ramachandra's case, I have already cited, the learned Judge says that to his mind the passage is the key-note to the construction of similar provisions in other Acts, i. e., that the fact whether the tax is payable out of any particular or specified land must have a material bearing on the construction of the words."

It was held that the sale was free from incumbrances. The same conclusion was arrived at in Abdur Rauf Chowdhury v. N. P. L. S. P. Chettyar Firm (9) which was also a case under the same Act.

It will be seen that in all the above cases one is concerned with sales by Govt or some public body to recover taxes or public loans. They are cases of Abkari tax (excise revenue), or Income-tax, or Municipal tax or a public loan. The present case is a case of recovery of a private debt by a private person the sadar-lambardar. Under the scheme of the O. P. Land Revenue Act the Govt. looks primarily to the sadar-lambardar for the payment of land revenue due in respect of the area for which the sadar lambardar is responsible (usually a village). If the sadar-lambardar fails to get in and pay over such revenue, he is liable to have his land sold. But on such sale, the land is sold subject to incumbrances because, as will be seen from the above quotation from s. 138, it is only when land is sold for arrears of land revenue "due in respect thereof" that it is sold free from incumbrances.

The sadar-lambardar having been made liable he is given a right over against the co-sharer whose revenue is in arrear. To recoup himself, he may sell the co-sharer's land, through the appropriate officer, or he may take any of the other steps available as if what was owed to him were land revenue owed to Govt. We are of the opinion that, having paid Govt. the first charge given by the statute to Govt. passed to him. We see no reason, however, to sweep away the mortgagee's rights in order to enable another private person, the sadar lambardar, to recoup himself. We conceive that were this so, it would open wide the gates to fraud of a type that could hardly be proved. Section 133 contains provisions which in certain circumstances compel mortgagees to pay land revenue at the risk of losing their security if they do not. But the person who pay is the sadar-lambardar. We take the case, of frequent occurrence, of due payment by the sadar-lambardar. There is no delay. In such a case the mortgagee cannot possibly know that although the land revenue has been duly paid without any delay, there is, in point of fact, a default on the part of his mortgagor because the mortgagor has not put the sadar-lambardar in funds as regards the share of land revenue due in respect of the mortgagor's holding. Yet, were we to hold that the sadar-lambardar can recoup himself as if he were Govt. selling the mortgagor's land in respect of an arrear of land revenue due in respect of that land, the mortgagee would find his security gone without any chance being given to him to pay.

This is not, in our opinion, the intention of the Act. We are of the opinion that the sadar-lambardar has priority over the mortgagee standing in Govt.'s shoes to the extent of the land revenue, due in respect of the mortgagor's land, paid by him. He can accordingly sell the land giving to the purchaser like priority unless the mortgagee redeems this charge by payment.

This case is a perfect example of the mischief that would arise if it were held that in such circumstances the sale was free from incumbrances. The plaintiff obtained a foreclosure decree on the basis of his mortgage of 0-2-0 share of Mouza (village) Nimarmunda. When, the preliminary decree having been made final, the decree-holder came to take possession, the defendant took objection in execution on the ground that he (the defendant) had purchased the share when it was sold for arrears of land revenue. That sale was not at the instance of Govt. for Govt. had been paid, but at the instance of the defendant who was sadar-lambardar of Mouza Nimarmunda. The defendant applied to the Tahsildar to sell the land. The land was put up for sale and bought by the defendant for Rs. 90. The value of the mortgage-decree was something over Rs. 700. This was wiped away if the decisions of the lower Courts are sound and wiped away because a private person, the sadar-lambardar, is given the same powers to recover the money he has paid as if the debt due to him from the revenue defaulter were due to Govt. as an arrear of land revenue.

In addition to the Rs. 90 the sadar-lambardar incurred costs amounting to Rs. 50 in the objection matter.

The plaintiff has not paid anything into Court though in the alternative he prayed only for a conditional order for possession, the condition being that he paid the defendant Rs. 90.

In our opinion, the true position is that until the defendant is paid what is due to him, i.e. until his charge has been cleared, he is entitled to resist. This affects the position so far as costs are concerned.

The appeal will be allowed. There will be an order for possession conditional upon the plaintiff paying to the defendant Rs. 90 together with Rs. 50 together with the costs of these proceedings. The plaintiff would have been entitled to possession and to the costs of these proceedings had he tendered to the defendant the Rs. 90 but that he did not do at the time of the objection application which was accordingly properly allowed. As the defendant was in the right in resisting, he is entitled to receive the Rs. 90 as well as the Rs. 90 before he can be compelled to deliver up possession.

Hindu Law—Widow—Adverse possession—Adverse possession by widow over property not inherited from husband—She acquires absolute title to it—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 3—Suit by joint Hindu brothers as reversioners—One dying—Steps to bring his legal representative on record not necessary—Second appeal—Inference from document.

On the death of a Hindu his widow entered into possession of his property and also of property which neither belonged to nor was held by him. There were separate mutations in respect of both the properties in the name of the widow. The Tahsildar had effected the mutations on the report of the patwari that the name of the widow should be entered by inheritance as there was no contest. There was no indication on the part of the widow that she had inherited the property from her husband. There was no evidence as to what claim was put forward by the widow at the time she took possession of the second property:

Held, that the widow had acquired absolute title by adverse possession to the property other than one inherited by her from her husband wherein she had only the widow's estate. The fact that the patwari reported the nature of transfer as by 'inheritance' did not amount to an admission by the widow.

Where a suit has been instituted by joint Hindu brothers as next reversioners and one of them dies the other brothers being nearer reversioners than the sons of the deceased, are his legal representatives and being already on record, no steps are necessary to bring them on record.

In a matter of legal inference from the documents, it is open to the High Court in second appeal to form its own opinion.

L. P. A. against an order of Mr. Justice Thom, in Second Appeal No. 273 of 1934, dated August 26, 1937.

Messrs. A. Sanyal and Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Pandey, for the Respondents.

Bennet, J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal by defendant No. 1, Ram Sarup Singh, and defendant No. 2, Udit Singh, against the decree of a learned Single Judge of this Court allowing the appeal of the plaintiffs. At the conclusion of the argument in this case, learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents orally stated that plaintiff No. 2, Bikaram Singh had died after the decree of the learned Single Judge, the date of death being November 7, 1938, and complained that his legal representatives had not been brought on the record. We think that the matter should have been the subject of an application in writing if the learned Counsel desired to bring it to our notice, but it appears to be sufficient to observe that the legal representatives of Bikaram Singh are apparently, his two brothers, plaintiff No. 1, Mohan Singh, and plaintiff No. 3, Sat Narain Singh, and as they are already on the record, no further steps appear to be required. It is not asserted that these Hindu brothers were separate. The plaintiffs sued as the nearest reversioners of one Kumar Singh and if Bikaram Singh had any sons, they would not be his legal representatives as there are the two uncles, plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 3, who are nearer reversioners, so they did not require to be brought on the record. The family pedigree is as follows:—

The facts which gave rise to the present suit are as follows: Bhairo Singh died and left a widow Mst. Parewa who held a zamindari share of 1 anna 6 pies and this widow died in 1899. Bhairo Singh was separated from his nephew Kumar Singh and Kumar Singh died as is the finding of the lower Appellate Court about three weeks after the death of Mst. Parewa. Mst. Asumedha, defendant No. 3, was then entered for the property of Bhairo Singh, 1 anna 6 pies, and she was also entered for a 6 pies zamin- dari share of her husband Kumar Singh. The immediate cause of the present suit is a deed of gift dated October 6, 1931, executed by Mst. Asumedha in favour of Ram Sarup and Udit, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, by which she made a gift of the two shares amounting altogether to 2 annas zamindari share. The plaintiffs sued claiming in para. 3 of the plaint that the 2 annas zamindari share was the property left by Kumar Singh and that on the death of Kumar Singh, defendant No. 3, Mst. Asumedha

Kunwar entered into possession of the property as a Hindu widow with a life-interest. The plaintiffs therefore asked for a declaratory decree that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are not the sons of the sister of Kumar Singh, deceased, but are the sons of the daughter of Bhairo Singh. This portion of the decree was granted by the trial Court although the defence was that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were sons of the sister of Kumar Singh and therefore the nearest reversioners under the Hindu Law of Inheritance Amendment Act. The finding of fact is not now in contest. The other portion of the relief was that there should be a declaration that the deed of relinquishment which purported to be a deed of gift dated October 6, 1931, was null and void against the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs after the death of Mst. Asumedha Kunwar. In regard to this relief the trial Court granted a declaration so far as it concerns the 6 pies zamindari share which has been held by Kumar Singh and no appeal was taken by the defendants against that decree. The trial Court held that Kumar Singh had not entered into possession at all of the 1 anna 6 pies zamindari share held by Mst. Parewa, widow Bhairo Singh, and the Court further held that Mst. Asumedha had been entered for this share by mutation in 1899 and that she had held it by adverse possession against the three daughters of Bhairo Singh who were entitled to hold by succession after their mother, and further that she had held it for the period of 18 years after the death of the last surviving daughter of Bhairo Singh and had therefore acquired a title by adverse possession against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The trial Court further held that this adverse possession by Mst. Asumedha acquired for her an absolute title as full owner of the 1 anna 6 pies share of Bhairo Singh and not merely the limited estate of a Hindu widow. The suit was, therefore, dismissed in regard to this 1 anna 6 pies share.

The plaintiff filed an appeal in the lower Appellate Court claiming that the adverse possession of Mst. Asumedha Kunwar was that of a Hindu widow and therefore that she had acquired an estate merely of a Hindu widow in the 1 anna 6 pies share originally of Bhairo Singh and that having acquired that estate she was unable to divest herself of it by a deed of gift or relinquish in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 although they were the rightful heirs entitled to possess that share. The plaintiffs brought a second appeal in this Court and the learned Single Judge of this Court has held that the title acquired by Mst. Asumedha Kunwar in the 1 anna 6 pies share was only that of a Hindu widow and that she had also acquired the full title by adverse possession to the estate of her husband and that her deed of gift to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was, therefore, invalid and the claim of the plaintiffs was allowed. Against that decree of the learned Single Judge, this Letters Patent Appeal has been brought and the question before us is whether under the circumstances of this case Mst. Asumedha Kunwar acquired adverse possession as a Hindu widow for herself and the full title for the estate of her husband or whether she acquired the full title for herself. No case has been shown to us in which a person acquiring title by adverse possession as a Hindu widow attempted to make a gift of her rights to the rightful heirs and the Courts have never held that she could not divest herself of the rights which she had acquired by adverse possession. The case is, therefore, somewhat unique in this feature.

As regards the law on the point, we are referred in the first instance to a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council of the year 1894 in Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram (1), in that case a Hindu proprietor died leaving a widow and a son who died leaving the widow of his father. The father's widow either during the son's lifetime or on his death took possession of the property left by the father and remained in possession for 17 years until she died. The son's widow who was really entitled to succeed brought a suit against the father's widow for the property, but this was dismissed on the ground of limitation in 1875. Before her death the father's widow transferred part of the property by gift. It was found that she had not made any assertion that she was taking possession of the estate as a Hindu widow. It was held therefore that by taking possession, she had taken possession of an absolute estate and that she was entitled to make a gift of that estate. On p. 450* their Lordships observed :

"The contention that although it might be barred as against the son and all persons claiming under him, the effect was only to extinguish those rights, and to let in the rights of any persons who would claim as reversionary heirs of Mangal does not appear to their Lordships to be supported by authority, nor is it tenable, unless it were clearly shown that when Jit Kunwar took possession she professed to do it as claiming only limited estate of a widow."

The next ruling is Shama Koer v. Dah Koer (2), a ruling of 1902. In that case there was a member of an undivided Hindu family whose widow and son's widow obtained possession of a portion of his property which was assigned by a hitbanama to a third person. The reversionary heirs then brought a suit against the survivor of the widows and her assignee to set aside the gift and for possession. This suit was brought after the period of limitation had expired from the time when the widows took possession. On p. 671* their Lordships stated:

"The only question therefore is: have the appellants given satisfactory proof of an arrangement with the two widows, which would be an answer to the plea of limitation?"

In this connection on p. 672* it is mentioned that reliance was placed on argument on certain documents such as a mukhtarnama which stated that the villagers were in possession of the widows as "life-interest." This mukhtarnama was executed by one of the widows:

"Their Lordships, however, think that, having regard to the position of the widows, who were pardanashin ladies, and considering that the mukhtar appointed by them was the mukhtar of the reversionary heirs, it would be dangerous to rely on such an admission, unless it were proved that the attention of the widows was directly called to it."

The ruling shows that some words in a document executed by widows cannot be taken to be an admission by the widows. The next ruling in point of time is Lajwanti v. Safa Chand (3) a ruling of 1924. In that case one Jawahara Mal was the owner of the property in dispute and he died in 1852 leaving three widows who took possession as widows. The eldest widow gave birth to a posthumous son who lived for a few months. This son, therefore, became the last male holder. Certain litigation arose between a nephew who claimed to be the adopted son and two of the surviving widows, the one who gave birth to the posthumous son having died. It was held that the two widows were entitled to the estate for their lives. This was of course incorrect. Many years later, the question then arose of the title to these two widows when they had been holding the estate, and it was held that as they were not heirs under the Hindu Law, their possession from 1869 to 1910 was adverse, but it was held that the property did not become their stridhan; on the other hand, they had acquired by adverse possession owning the title of Hindu widows. On p. 306* it was stated:

"The Hindu widow, as often pointed out, is not a life renter but has a widow's estate—that is to say, a widow's estate in her deceased husband's estate. If possessing as widow she possesses adversely to anyone as to certain parcels, she does not acquire the parcels as stridhan but she makes them good to her husband's estate. The result is the mousahs are Jawahara Mal's estate, the respondents having no title to attack them, and as such, the plaintiff is entitled as heir to her father to take them."

In this case the property was the property originally of the husband of the widows and there was no question apparently but that they had taken as his widows. They did not apparently during their life-time make any attempt to dispose of these mousahs. The circumstances of this particular ruling are different therefore from those of the rulings where the question has arisen in what capacity the widows took possession where the widows have attempted to make a disposal of the property afterwards. The scope of this ruling in Lajwanti v. Safa Chand (3) has been considered in a ruling of the Oudh Chief Court in Raj Bahadur Singh v. Kanhaiya Bakhsh Singh, 99 Ind. Cas. 890 (4) where it was held that there is no rule that whenever a Hindu widow is found in adverse possession of property, she must be treated as being in adverse possession of a widow's estate only. In Uman Shankar v. Aisha Khatun (5) it was laid down that admissions by a Hindu widow that she had acquired the property as heir to her husband does not necessarily involve the legal inference that she was asserting only a limited interest and not her absolute right. The scope of the ruling in Lajwanti v. Safa Chand (3) was further considered in Rikhdeo Tewari v. Sukhdeo Tewari (6). At p. 46 the ruling observed:

"We would distinguish this decision as it has previously been distinguished on the ground that in the Privy Council case at the time when she entered into possession, she was entitled to the property as a widow and it was only subsequently that the birth of a posthumous son made her liable to dispossession. In the present case, Mst. Naulasi was not entitled in any view to a Hindu widow's possession at the time when she obtained entry. The Privy Council decision has been distinguished in the same way in other cases. We would refer to Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (7) and Kali Charan v. Peare (8)."

In Dungar Singh v. Maid Kunwar (9) there was a ruling by a Bench of which one of us was a member with Mukherji, J., and in that case it was laid down that where a Hindu widow takes a property to which she is not entitled to succeed under the Hindu Law, the question whether she acquires a limited estate or an absolute estate, depends on the question of fact whether she claimed to take the property through her husband, or not. If she has taken through her husband she acquires by prescription only a limited estate of a Hindu widow and does not obtain an absolute estate, but if there is no evidence that she has so limited her claim, she takes an absolute estate as stri-dhana. Learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents relied on the way in which the facts had been treated in that ruling which was a first appeal, but we do not think that the method of treatment of the facts has any bearing on the present case, as the evidence in that case was different. The widow in that case gave evidence and the statement in her deposition partly formed the basis of the decision. We have not had any statement by defendant No. 3 in the present case. For the respondents reliance is also placed on Shankar Lal v. Omodar Das (10), a ruling by the same Bench. On p. 451*, col. 1, it was held:

"The mere fact that a Hindu woman holds property need not necessarily imply that she holds it for her own benefit. She may hold it on behalf of her husband's estate or on behalf of her son's state as the case may be."

In that case the widow, Mst. Basanti made a clear statement that she was holding as heir to her husband." This statement was in her will. We now have to examine the evidence in the present case in the light of these rulings. There is firstly the fact that mutation was effected separately for 1 anna 6 pies share and the 6 pies share. Learned Counsel for the respondents claimed that the two documents produced are admissions by the widow (7) A I R 1919 P O 44; 53 Ind. Cas. 901; 46 I A 285; 3 M 244; (1919) M W N 724; 10 L W 679; 24 C W N 46; 38 M L J 313; 18 A L J 274 (P O).

that she took by inheritance. It is true that in col. 9 the nature of transfer is stated to be "inheritance," but these documents are not statements by the widow. They are signed only by the patwari Achaibar Lal. There is no reason to suppose that the widow made any report or application for mutation or that there was any contested case. All that is produced is a copy of the mutation register and it is not headed with the heading of any contested case. Under the U. P. Land Revenue Court Act III of 1901, s. 35, when a report is made to the Tahsildar in an undisputed case, he records a succession and it is only if there is a dispute that he refers the matter to the Collector for decision under s. 40. The Tahsildar therefore was acting in this manner as an executive officer and not as a Court. The mere fact that the patwari reported (under department VII Board of Revenue Circulars) that the name of Mst. Asumedha should be entered by inheritance does not in any way amount to an admission by her. The next document was a usufructuary mortgage by Mst. Asumedha, dated July 31, 1901. This usufructuary mortgage was in favour of the grandmother of the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs are at present in possession of the property. The usufructuary mortgage does not anywhere set out that Mst. Asumedha was holding the property as the widow of her husband. She could not have done so in view of the fact that her husband was not the person legally entitled to the property and he had never held it.

The next document is a deed of gift in the suit dated October 6, 1931. In this document also Mst. Asumedha does not state that she holds as the widow of her husband. She states merely that the property "is owned and possessed by me, the executant, over which the mortgagees are in possession now. I, the executant, have no male or female issue."

Learned Counsel place some reliance on an expression which is in vernacular aur apne warasat se ham moqir ilahda hogae; and which has been somewhat vaguely rendered in the translation as "I, the executant, have severed my connection from the inheritance." The lower Appellate Court has observed that this reference to inheritance may be taken to apply to the 6 pies share which Mst. Asumedha had and to which she had succeeded from her husband. We do not think that any connection can be claimed to exist between the 1 anna 6 pies share and a right of inheritance. Nor it is clear that Mst. Asumedha intended to put forward such a statement. In this deed of gift, there is a certain amount of confusion and in one place she refers to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as sons of her sister, and in another place she refers to them as sons of her husband's sister. Learned Counsel has pointed out that the deed of gift is of 1931 and the Hindu Law of Inheritance Amendment Act came into force two years previously in 1929. The document states that legal opinion was taken and apparently the legal opinion was that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 would have a claim as sons of a sister of Kumar Singh to inherit from him as reversioners. Very possibly, this was introduced into the document to support their claim to the 6 pies share which had belonged to Kumar Singh. The Courts below have found that that claim is false and that they are not the sons of the sister of Kumar Singh. But the Courts have found that they are sons of the daughter of Bhairo Singh and are, therefore, entitled as their legal heirs to the estate of Bhairo Singh on the death of all his daughters which took place 18 years before the suit. We think that the language in the deed of gift is intended to bolster up this false claim of inheritance as heirs of Kumar Singh and we do not think that the language is intended to set out that Mst. Asumedha claimed to take as a Hindu widow.

Moreover, the rulings which we have quoted indicate that the important question is what claim did Mst. Asumedha put forward at the time that she took possession of the property in question. This is a matter to be established by evidence. Apparently she made no claim at the time to inherit as a Hindu widow in regard to this 1 anna 6 pies share. The mere fact that the patwari thought she was entitled to inherit as a Hindu widow has no bearing on the point. We think, therefore, that the burden of proof lay on the plaintiffs to establish that Mst. Asumedha had taken possession of the 1 anna 6 pies share as a Hindu widow claiming only the rights of a Hindu widow and the plaintiffs have failed to show that according to the finding of the two Courts below. No doubt, it is open to this Court to form its own opinion in second appeal because this is a matter of legal inference from the documents. We have examined the documents and we do not consider that this legal inference has been established by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs. We consider that on this view of the case, the decree of the lower Appellate Court was correct.

Accordingly we allow this Letters Patent Appeal and we set aside the decree of the learned Single Judge in favour of the plaintiffs and we restore the decree of the lower Appellate Court with costs of both the proceedings in this Court to defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Assignment—Decree—Assignment of, after its passing but before it is drawn up—Validity—Whether carries with it right to decree passed in appeal—Hindu Law—Alienation—Karta—One of two kartas assigning decree—Assignment, if can be challenged by person not member of family.

The assignment of a decree is nothing more than an assignment of the rights conferred by the decree. These rights are acquired as soon as the decree is passed or pronounced and cannot be made dependent on the preparation of the decree which is more or less a ministerial act. As the Civil P. C. provides in O. XX, r. 7, that the decree shall bear the date on which the judgment is pronounced, the decree must, in the eye of law, be presumed to have come into existence on the date on which the judgment was pronounced. The assignment of a decree after the judgment is pronounced but before the decree is drawn up is, therefore, valid. 54 Ind. Cas., 913 (1), distinguished.

When a decree is assigned, what is transferred, is not the decree itself but the interest of the decree-holder in the decree as may be finally determined and therefore the assignment of a decree carries with it the right to the decree passed in appeal. 44 Ind. Cas. 819 (2), relied on.

Where a joint Hindu family has two kartas, an assignment of a decree made by one of them alone cannot be challenged by a person who is not a member of the joint family. Such an alienation is not unlawful or void ab initio but is voidable only at the option of the other co-parceners, who alone are affected by unauthorised act. 159 Ind. Cas. 474 (3) and Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandar (4), relied on.

Messrs. Mahabir Prasad and S. C. Muzamdar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Khurshaid Husnain, K. Dayal and K. P. Sukul, for the Respondents.

Fazl Ali, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant No. 1 (one of the defendants first party) in a suit under O. XXI, r. 63 of the Civil P. C. which has been decreed in favour of the plaintiff.

It appears that defendants Nos. 15 to 19 (defendants third party) owed money to the plaintiff as well as to defendants first party. On April 2, 1930, defendant No. 15 and one Meghraj, who held a power-of-attorney from defendant No. 16, executed a deed purporting to assign in favour of the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 2,506 obtained by defendants third party against defendants second party. This decree was subsequently appealed against by defendants second party, but their appeal was dismissed and the decree was upheld by the Appellate Court on September 7, 1934. In 1934 defendants first party executed a decree which they had obtained against defendants third party and on October 5, 1934, they attached the appellate decree passed on September 7, 1934, in favour of defendants third party against defendants second party. On January 23, 1935, the defendants second party paid a sum of Rs. 3,369 which was the total amount due on that date under the decree attached by them and the defendants first party filed a petition of satisfaction. The plaintiff thereupon applied under O. XXI, r. 58, and claimed that the decree in question having been assigned to him in 1930, the defendants first party could not attach it afterwards in execution of their decree and that he was entitled to the sum which had been realised by defendants first party from the judgment-debtors (defendants second party). This claim was disallowed and so on July 22, 1935, the plaintiff instituted the present suit. The suit having been decreed in the Courts below, one of the defendants first party has preferred this second appeal impleading defendants Nos. 2 to 4 as respondents in the appeal.

It may be stated here that in the suit which defendants third party, had brought against defendants second party, the judgment was pronounced on March 31, 1930, that is to say, two days before the deed of assignment, but the decree was not prepared and signed until April 7, 1930. The first point raised on behalf of the appellant is that the plaintiff did not acquire a valid title to the decree inasmuch as it was not in existence on the date of the assignment. In support of this argument it has been pointed out that the Code itself draws a distinction between a judgment and a decree and that no decree can be enforced until it has been prepared and signed. I think, however, that a complete answer to this contention is provided by O. XX, r. 7, which provides that the decree shall bear the date on which the judgment was pronounced. The assignment of a decree is nothing more than an assignment of the rights conferred by the decree. These rights are acquired as soon as the decree is passed or pronounced and cannot be made dependent on the preparation of the decree, which is more or less a ministerial act. As the Code provides that the decree shall bear the date on which the judgment is pronounced, the decree must in the eye of law be presumed to have come into existence on the date on which the judgment was pronounced. The mere fact that the decree cannot be executed until it has been prepared and signed cannot avail the appellant, because the law makes it necessary that a petition for execution must contain certain particulars embodied in the decree. The learned Advocate for the appellant has placed some reliance upon Gela Ram v. Ganga Ram, 54 Ind. Cas. 913 (1) in which the Court refused to entertain an appeal on the ground that no decree had been prepared in the case in which the appeal had been preferred. The facts of the case were, however, peculiar and the case is hardly in point.

The next question raised on behalf of the appellant was that because the plaintiff was the assignee of the decree of the trial Court only, the assignment in his favour did not carry with it the right in the decree of the Appellate Court which was passed on September 7, 1934, and was attached by the defendants first party on October 5, 1934. A similar point appears to have been raised in M. Ponnusami Pillai v. Chidambaram Chettiar (2) wherein it was pointed out by the learned Judges who decided that case that when a decree is assigned what is transferred is not the decree itself but the interest of the decree-holder in the decree as may be finally determined and therefore the assignment of a decree carries with it the right to the decree passed in appeal.

The next point urged on behalf of the appellant was that the assignment in favour of the plaintiff was not valid inasmuch as in the power-of-attorney held by Meghraj from Minnoo Lal no authority was given to him to execute a deed of assignment relating to a decree. It appears from the judgments of the Courts below that there were two kartas in the joint family of which defendants Nos. 15 to 19 were members, these being Kanhaiya Lal and Minnoo Lal. From a genealogy which forms part of the written statement of defendant No. 1, it appears that both Minnoo Lal and Sita Ram on whose behalf Meghraj executed the assignment deed are sons of Kanhaiya Lal, one of the executants of the deed. Minnoo Lal was adopted by one Dilsukh Rai, the only son of Tormal, and Kanhaiya Lal was adopted by Balkishun Das, a brother of Tormal. It appears that Sitaram has been adopted by his brother Minnoo Lal. The judgment of the trial Court further shows that the descendants of Balkishun Das and Tormal were joint. Assuming then that Meghraj was not empowered by the power-of-attorney to execute a deed of assignment relating to a decree, the point which is still to be decided is whether the assignment, which was admittedly executed by one of the two kartas of a joint family can be challenged by a person who is not a member of the joint family. In my opinion this point is fully covered by the decision of the Lahore High Court in the Imperial Bank of India, Jullundur v. Maya Devi (3) which is based upon the observation made by the Judicial Committee in Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (4). In that case it was held that under the Mitakshara Law though the manager of a joint Hindu family cannot alienate joint family property except for family necessity or with the consent of the co-parceners if they are adults, yet an alienation by him which cannot be supported on those grounds, is not unlawful or void ab initio, but is voidable at the option of the other co-parceners, who alone are affected by his unauthorised act, and no person who is a stranger to the family and does not possess a right to have the transaction defeated on other grounds (e. g. under s. 53 of the T. P. Act) has a locus standi to intervene and impugn such an alienation, merely because it is in excess of his authority to deal with the property for family purposes. In the present case the assignment was never challenged by Minnoo Lal or Sitaram. Thus the question as to whether Meghraj was empowered to assign the decree under the power-of-attorney does not arise. I should also state that the document, though it is somewhat obscurely worded, may well bear the construction which has been put upon it by the Courts below—that is to say, it expressly authorises Meghraj to execute such documents as are signed by Kanhaiya Lal (who was after all the father of Minnoo Lal and Sitaram) without reference to Minnoo Lal and Sitaram.

(1) 54 Ind. Cas. 913; A.I.R. 1920 Lah 395.

(2) A.I.R. 1918 Mad 279; 44 Ind. Cas. 819; 35 M.L.J. 294; 23 M.L.T. 213; 7 L.W. 568; (1918) M.W.N. 194.

It was contended on behalf of the respondents that this appeal is incompetent inasmuch as it has not been preferred on behalf of all the members of the defendants first party. But as the other members have been impleaded as respondents, there was nothing to prevent us from passing a decree in favour of all the defendants first party under O. XLI, r. 33 of the Civil P. C. if we thought that the appeal should be allowed. The question, however, is merely academic because the appeal fails on its merits.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs and the cross-objections not being pressed by the respondents, must also be dismissed but without costs.

Meredith, J—I agree with my learned brother. I do not think the findings of fact are vitiated by any misplacement of onus. On the contrary, the lower Appellate Court has correctly stated the position in observing that the onus was primarily on the plaintiff because his claim was rejected in a proceeding under O. XXI, r. 5, Civil P. C., but when evidence had been gone into on both sides, the question of onus was of secondary importance.

Order XX, r. 7, Civil P. C., seems to me a complete answer to the contention that when the assignment was made, there was no decree in existence which could be assigned. Judgment had been pronounced, although the formal decree had not been prepared, and though the decree was not signed until some days after the assignment, still under O. XX, r. 7 the date of the decree is the date of the judgment, and the decree must, therefore in law, be deemed to have come into existence on the date when the judgment was delivered.

The argument that it was the decree of the Appellate Court which the defendants first party attached and that that decree was never assigned is, in my view, completely met by M. Ponnusami Pillai v. Chidambaram Chettiar (2) wherein it was laid down that the assignment of a decree under appeal gives the assignee the right to execute the appellate decree, as what is assigned is not only the decree selfit but the interest of the decree-holder therein as finally determined.

Lastly, the argument, that there was no valid assignment as Meghraj's power-of-attorney did not give him any authority to execute a sale deed relating to a decree, finds answer in Imperial Bank of India, Jullundur v. Maya Devi (3). If the execution be held to be by one karta only out of the two, then the document would be merely voidable at the option of the other co-parceners and not wholly void. The assignment would, therefore, be valid in law unless and until avoided by any of the co-parceners, or, any one deriving through them. In the present case the other members of the family of the defendants third-party were impleaded in the suit and did not appear to challenge the assignment. The finding, moreover, was that the assignment was for consideration and for benefit of the joint family.

Apart from that both the lower Courts have interpreted the power-of-attorney (Ex. 6) as authorizing Meghraj to sign kevalas of all sorts if they bear the signature of the other karta Kanhaiya Lal. The power-of-attorney may be badly worded, but there is nothing in it, in my opinion, which would justify us in holding that the interpretation put upon it by both the Courts below is wrong.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Revision No. 285 of 1937

THOM, O. J. AND GANGA NATH, J.

GOVIND RAM AND ANOTHER —DEBITORS
—APPLICANTS

MAJOR A. U. JOHN—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR
OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 115—Jurisdiction of Court under s. 151—Interference by High Court under s. 115 with order under s. 151.

Section 151, Civil P. O., does not confer upon the Courts any powers with which they were not vested before the passing of the Civil P. O. There are certain well-recognized principles which guide the Courts in the exercise of their jurisdiction under s. 151. The Courts must proceed according to the principles of equity, justice and good conscience. Under s. 115 the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere where the lower Court has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. [p. 792, col. 2.]

The parties entered into a contract which took the form of a mortgage-deed and a finance agreement both of which were executed on the same day at Bombay. The deed recited that "no suit or proceeding arising out of and in relation to this indenture shall be instituted in any Court other than the High Court of Judicature at Bombay." On default of the mortgagors to pay an instalment due under the mortgage, the mortgagees filed a suit at Bombay. Subsequently the mortgagors made an application under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act and obtained an injunction restraining the mortgagees from proceeding with their suit in the Bombay High Court:

Held, that judged even by the lowest standards of commercial morality, the conduct of the mortgagors was utterly inexcusable. There was nothing whatever illegal in the contract and such a provision was quite usual and was in the circumstances eminently reasonable. In granting the injunction, the Court had not acted consonantly with the spirit of s. 151, Civil P. O. In restraining, the mortgagees from doing something which the mortgagors agreed that they should be permitted to do in a solemn contract, the Court had not acted in accordance with the principles of equity, justice and good conscience. It was not in accordance with these principles to permit a party to repudiate his contractual obligations. In failing to take into consideration the legal rights of the mortgagees the Court acted with material irregularity.

O. R. against the order of the Special Judge, Second Grade, Agra, dated March 18, 1937.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Messrs. P. L. Banerji, C. B. Agarwala and S. P. Kumar, for the Applicants.

Messrs. B. Malik, J. Swarup and Kali Nath, for the Opposite Party.

Thom, C. J.—This is an application in civil revision under s. 115, Civil P. O. The applicants Govind Ram Gordhandass and Ramnath Gordhandass are the proprietors of Messrs. Govindram Ramnath & Co. On July 5, 1934, the applicants entered into a contract with Major A. U. John and Mr. G. A. John who are owners of certain mills at Agra. This contract took the form of a mortgage deed and a finance agreement both of which were executed on the same day. Under the mortgage deed, the mortgagees agreed to advance the sum of seven lakhs upon the mills belonging to Major A. U. John and Mr. G. A. John (now deceased). The applicants, under the finance agreement undertook to finance the mills up to a figure of four lakhs. The negotiations which culminated in the execution of the mortgage deed and the finance agreement were conducted in Bombay and the mortgagors, under the terms of the mortgage-deed, were taken bound to re-pay the amount due under the mortgage at Bombay. The mortgage deed included the following provision :

"And it is hereby further agreed and declared that no suit or proceeding arising out of and in relation to this indenture shall be instituted in any Court other than the High Court of Judicature at Bombay."

It is alleged on behalf of the applicants that the mortgagors defaulted in regard to the payment of an instalment due under the aforesaid mortgage. Following upon this default a suit was instituted in the High Court of Judicature at Bombay. Subsequent to the institution of this suit the mortgagors made an application under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act. The matter was referred to the Special Judge who has passed an order of injunction restraining the applicants from proceeding with their suit in the Bombay High Court. This order of the Special Judge has been upheld by the learned District Judge of Agra in his order of May 17, 1937. Against this order the applicants have preferred this application in civil revision. The learned District Judge appears to have taken the view that the contract entered into between the applicants on the one hand and Major A. U. John and Mr. G. A. John on the other was an illegal contract and mainly upon that ground he has declined to interfere with the order of the Special Judge restraining the applicants from prosecuting their suit in the High Court at Bombay.

When the mortgage was executed in 1934, the parties to the contract had in view the impending debt legislation of the Govt. of the U. P. It was with the object of avoiding the restrictions which were likely to be imposed by that legislation that the aforementioned clause to the effect that no suit or proceeding arising out of and in relation to the indenture should be instituted in any Court other than the High Court of Judicature at Bombay was inserted. We may take it that the applicants would never have agreed to the terms of the hypothecation bond and the finance agreement had not this clause been inserted. When the mortgagors had defaulted and when thereupon the mortgagees filed a suit in the Bombay High Court, the mortgagors proceeded to do what they in effect had solemnly undertaken not to do under the mortgage deed; they applied for the benefits of the Encumbered Estates Act and secured an order of injunction against the applicants. They broke their contract. They refuse to honour their signatures. Judged even by the lowest standards of commercial morality, their conduct appears to us to be utterly inexcusable. We do not consider it necessary in disposing of this application to say anything as to what the rights of the mortgagors are under the Encumbered Estates Act in the special circumstances of this case. We are only concerned with the question as to whether the order restraining the applicants from prosecuting their suit in the Bombay High Court is an order which should be allowed to stand.

It was contended by the learned Counsel for the mortgagors that inasmuch as this was an application in civil revision, this Court could not interfere unless it was held that the order against which the application in revision is preferred was passed without jurisdiction. The terms of s. 115 do not warrant this contention. Under s. 115 this Court has jurisdiction to interfere where the lower Court has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. The Courts below purported to have acted under s. 151, Civil P. C. Section 151, Civil P. C., it is well established, does not confer upon the Courts any powers with which they were not vested before the passing of the Civil P. C. There are certain well-recognized principles which guide the Courts in the exercise of their jurisdiction under s. 151, Civil P. C.

It was contended for the opposite parties that the High Court should not interfere in revision where the order challenged purports to be passed under s. 151. We have no hesitation in repelling this contention. No Court has unrestricted jurisdiction to pass orders under s. 151. The Courts must proceed according to the principles of equity, justice and good conscience. Now there is nothing whatever illegal in the contract which was entered into by the John Brothers on the one hand and the applicants upon the other. The former took certain benefits under the contract which they would not have obtained had they not agreed to the provision that no suit arising out of the agreement should be instituted in any Court other than the High Court of Judicature at Bombay. Such a provision is quite usual and was in the circumstances eminently reasonable. It was suggested that there are other creditors of Messrs. John and that their rights would be jeopardized if the case in the Bombay High Court were allowed to proceed. These creditors, however, are not parties to this application. They are not represented in these proceedings. Their interests do not fall to be considered in the disposal of this application. They have no locus to oppose the application. It was further suggested that if the applicants obtained a decree in the Bombay High Court, they might proceed to sell the property mortgaged at a price much lower than its real value. This is a difficulty which, in our judgment, does not appear to be insurmountable. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru who appears for the applicants has given an undertaking that if a decree is passed in favour of his clients by the Bombay High Court before there is any attempt to put that decree into execution by sale of the mortgaged property, three months' notice will be given to Major A. U. John, the heirs of G. A. John, the Special Judge charged with the proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act and to the Collector at Agra. Counsel appearing for the heirs of Mr. G. A. John in the lower Court has undertaken to-day to furnish Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru with the names and addresses of the heirs of Mr. G. A. John.

We are satisfied that in granting the injunction the learned Special Judge has not acted consonantly with the spirit of s. 151, Civil P. C. In restraining, in the circumstances, the plaintiffs from doing something which the mortgagors Major A. U. John and Mr. G. A. John agreed that they should be permitted to do in a solemn contract, the Courts below have not acted in accordance with the principles of equity, justice and good conscience. It is not in accordance with these principles to permit a party to repudiate his contractual obligations, as the opposite parties have done in the present instance. Their obligations are not illegal. There is nothing in the Encumbered Estates Act which forbids parties to a contract agreeing on a forum for the decision of their disputes. Further the learned Special Judge and the learned District Judge have not taken into consideration the legitimate legal rights of the applicants. In failing to take into consideration these rights, the Courts below have acted with material irregularity. In the result, we allow this application, we set aside the order of the learned District Judge and recall the order of injunction. The applicants are entitled to their costs.

Insurance—Life insurance—Policy, interpretation of—Proposal and declaration by assured forming basis of contract—Assured declaring that contract would become void if declaration or proposal contained untrue statements—Some statements found untrue but fraud not proved—Liability of company held ceased.

According to the terms of a life policy the representations, statements and agreements in the application for the policy were made part of the contract between the assured and the Insurance Co. The following declaration was made by the assured: "I do hereby declare that the above answers and statements are true and that I have not withheld or concealed any information and I do hereby agree that this declaration together with the proposal shall be the basis of the contract to be made and that if any untrue averment is contained in this declaration or in the said proposal or if it shall hereafter appear that any information has been withheld, then the said contract shall be void and all moneys which shall have been paid on account of the assurance shall be forfeited." Some of the statements made by the assured were found to be untrue. No fraud was, however, proved:

Held, that by the terms of the policy in question, the liability of the company ceased when it was found that any of the statements contained in the declaration or the proposal were untrue. 129 Ind. S. C. A. against the order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated November 13, 1936.

Messrs. J. Jackson and Shyam Manohar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Bhaurani Snankar and Bijai Shankar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal against a decree of the learned District Judge of Lucknow.

On July 18, 1933, Mst. Sundara Devi, wife of the plaintiff-respondent Asa Ram, got her life insured with the defendant company, namely, the Asian Assurance Co., Ltd. She died on September 11, 1934. On her death the plaintiff, to whom the policy had been assigned applied to the company for the money but the company refused to pay. Thereupon the suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by the plaintiff for recovery of Rs. 2,700 with future interest. Defendant No. 2 impleaded in the suit is the agent in Lucknow of the first defendant company. He supported the plaintiff's claim and claimed exemption from costs. The defendant company admitted that Sundara Devi was insured for Rs. 2,500 under a policy dated August 30, 1933, but contended that under the terms of the policy in question, it became void on account of certain untrue statements made in the declaration of the assured. It was also contended that the assured practised fraud on the company by various statements made by her. Five issues were framed by the trial Court on the pleas raised by the defendant No. 1 but subsequently owing to a statement made by the defendants' Pleader, only the following two issues were retained and the others were struck off—

1. Did the policy become void on account of fraud practised by the plaintiff-defendant No. 2 and the assured?

2. To what relief and against which of the defendants is the plaintiff entitled?

Finding on issue No. 1 that no fraud had been proved, the learned Civil Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit and on appeal by the defendant company, the decree was upheld by the learned District Judge.

It appears that on February 18, 1936, the Pleader for the defendant company made the following statement :

"I rely on the elements of fraud as alleged in para. 15 of my written statement cls. (a), (b), (d), (e), (h) and paras. 16 and 18. I give up all other elements alleged before".

Paragraph 15 of the written statement referred to in the Pleader's statement is as follows:—

"The policy in suit was obtained from the answering defendant by making to it in form of proposal form D, a declaration and also otherwise the following misrepresentations and by concealing from it many material facts.

(a) That the age of the assured was only 25 years.

(b) That the assured consulted a physician six months before the date of her proposal and that, too, for fever only.

(c) That the assured was the married wife of the plaintiff and had been married for seven years.

(d) That on no occasion and for no diseases or injuries the assured ever received any medical advice.

(e) That the assured never suffered from any serious disease.

(f) That the assured never had any abortions and that she was not pregnant at the time of the proposal.

(g) That the assured was literate.

(h) That the assured had only one sister aged 18 years."

It will thus appear that the Pleader for the defendant company gave up the pleas contained in cls. (c), (f) and (g) of para. 15 of the written statement and relied only on

cls. (a), (b), (d), (e) and (h) as constituting fraud. The learned Counsel for the appellant company, however, relies on para. 14 of the written statement, which is as follows:—

"According to the terms of the policy in suit, no liability can attach to the answering defendant and the policy is to become void, if any untrue statement is found to be contained in the declaration (form D) of the assured or in her proposal or if it should appear that any information has been withheld."

and argues that the defence contained in this paragraph, which is totally independent of fraud, was never given up and that though the learned trial Court held that where according to the terms of the policy the representations, statements and agreements in the application for the policy are made part of the contract, the company is liable only if those representations and statements are true, and though some of the statements made by the deceased lady have been found to be untrue, the learned Judge wrongly held that as no fraud was proved, the plaintiff was entitled to the money claimed. The learned Counsel has drawn our attention to the following declaration contained in Ex. A-32 :

"I do hereby declare that the above answers and statements are true and that I have not withheld or concealed any information and I do hereby agree that this declaration together with the proposal shall be the basis of the contract to be made.... and that if any untrue averment is contained in this declaration or in the said proposal or if it shall hereafter appear that any information has been withheld then the said contract shall be void and all moneys which shall have been paid on account of the assurance shall be forfeited".

We are of opinion that the defendant company is entitled to put up this agreement in defence even though no fraud has been found to be proved. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent argues that no issue having been framed by the trial Court on the allegations contained in para. 14 of the written statement, those allegations must be deemed to have been withdrawn. We are not prepared to accept this contention. It is true that no issue was framed on the plea raised in para. 14 but the judgments of both the Courts below show that the matter was argued on behalf of the defendant company and the mere omission of the Court below to frame an issue on the point cannot be taken to mean that the plea was withdrawn. The learned Judge of the trial Court himself remarked:—

"I think having regard to the above terms, it is not necessary to prove in the case before me that the false statement was fraudulent. Law Journal Vol. 32

Queen's Bench* does not apply to the facts of this case because there is no such condition here that there should be fraudulent concealment or designedly untrue statements. In the 2 King's Bench Division† the declaration was not to the effect as it is in this case. So these rulings do not fully apply and the rulings cited by defendant No. 1's learned Counsel are more applicable to the facts of this case. Thus we have to see if the statements made are true or false and the point of materiality does not arise"; still he decreed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that no fraud or wilful misrepresentation was proved. We are clearly of opinion that by the terms of the policy in question the liability of the company ceased when it was found that any of the statements contained in the declaration or the proposal were untrue. In Ex. A-32 it was stated in answer to question No. 3 that no medical advice was sought but Ex. A-34, the Outpatient Register of Mulchand Rastogi Aushdhalaya, shows that the lady was under medical treatment off and on from November 22, 1932, upto April 23, 1933. Then, a statement was made in Ex. A-32 that the proposer had only one sister while the evidence of the plaintiff himself and that of D. W. No. 3 and D. W. No. 4 prove that she had three sisters living at the time. Similarly the number of brothers given in Ex. A-32 is one but the plaintiff's own evidence shows that the lady had three brothers. We do not also agree with the remarks of the Courts below that the evidence of Dr. Curtis, who put the questions contained in Ex. A-32 to the lady, was necessary to prove that the lady who was practically illiterate, correctly understood the questions put to her. Her husband, the plaintiff, admits in his examination not only that he was present when the questions were put to the deceased by Miss Curtis and answered some of the questions himself but also that the entries as contained in Ex. A-32 were correct. In these circumstances, it cannot be argued with reason that the lady did not understand the questions put to her which were simple enough or that the medical examiner did not correctly record the answers.

We are of opinion that in view of the law as laid down in Great Eastern Life Assurance Co., Ltd. v. Bai Hira, (A. I. R. 1931 Bom., 146) (1), Lakshmishankar Kanji Rawal v. (1) A I R 1931 Bom. 146; 129 Ind. Cas. 744 32 Bom. L R 1871; Ind. Rul. (1931) Bom, 216; 55 B 124.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiff-respondent's suit dismissed. In view however of the special circumstances of the case and of the fact that no wilful fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the assured has been proved, we order parties to bear their own costs in all the Courts.

PRAGJI BHULABHAI—COMPLAINANT

Criminal trial—Practice—Appeal from conviction on private prosecution—Complainant, if entitled to be heard by an Advocate.

The strict rule is that in an appeal against a conviction, only the Crown is entitled to be served with notice, and heard. Nobody but the Crown is entitled to be heard, because no private citizen is technically interested in upholding a conviction. But the true rule, which should be followed in all Courts, is that in private prosecutions, the Court in its discretion may allow the complainant to appear by an Advocate, but it is not in any case bound to do so.

Cr. Ref. made by the District Magistrate, Surat.

Mr. A. S. Navalkar, for the Complainant.

Mr. J. C. Shah, for the Accused.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is a reference made by the District Magistrate of Surat which raises a short point of practice. The accused was prosecuted on a private prosecution, and was convicted, and he appealed to the City Magistrate of Surat. The learned Magistrate held that the complainant's Advocate was not entitled to be heard on the appeal, but only the Public Prosecutor could be heard. The District Magistrate was then moved in revision and he has referred the matter to us, because in his opinion the complainant was entitled to be heard by an Advocate, and he says that it is the practice obtaining in the District of Surat, as in other districts, that in appeals in private cases, opponents' Pleaders are heard.

I think the strict rule is that in an appeal against a conviction, only the Crown is entitled to be served with notice, and heard. Notice is served on an officer on behalf of the Local Govt. under s. 422, Criminal P. O., and in my opinion, nobody but the Crown is entitled to be heard, because no private citizen is technically interested in upholding a conviction. The practice in the High Court is for the Advocate for the complainant to be heard if the Court thinks fit to hear him. In some appeals the Govt. Pleader does not appear, for instance, an appeal against conviction for defamation in a private prosecution where Govt. may feel that they are not really interested in upholding the conviction. In my opinion, the true rule, which should be followed in all Courts, is that in private prosecution the Court in its discretion may allow the complainant to appear by an Advocate, but it is not in any case bound to do so. I think, therefore, we can only send the case back to the City Magistrate with an intimation that he is entitled, if he thinks fit, to hear an Advocate for the complainant.

Sen, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Family business—Joint family of brothers governed by Dayabhag School starting business—Son of one of them taking very active part in firm affairs from commencement—Whether personally liable for debts of firm contracted during lifetime of his father.

Where a joint family of brothers governed by the Dayabhag School of Hindu Law start a business and a son of one of them takes such an active part in the business from its commencement as to infer that he was one of the partners, he is personally liable for the debts of the firm contracted even in the lifetime of his father. That personal liability would not cease on the death of his father and on his acquiring an interest in the family property.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, dated September 30, 1936.

Sir M. N. Mukharji and Messrs. G. N. Mukharji, S. N. Sahay, Prem Lall and K. P. Sukul for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, Nitai Chandra Ghosh, Sudhir Chandra Ghosh and Girindra Banarji, for the Respondents.

HARRIES, C. J. — This is a plaintiff's appeal from a decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur passed in Money Suit No. 191 of 1934. The suit was decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge against all the defendants. As regards defendants Nos. 3 and 7, the decree was not only against their share in the family property but also a personal decree. The decree against the other defendants was a decree to the extent of their interest in the family property.

In this appeal the plaintiff contends that he should have been granted a personal decree not only against defendants Nos. 3 and 7 but also against defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 6.

The facts of the case can be shortly stated as follows:—In the year 1920, three brothers Ashu, Kedarnath and Gangadas commenced to carry on business, and in that business Oharu and Nirmal, the sons of Kedarnath, played an important part. This family was governed by the Dayabhag School of Hindu Law. In the year 1921, this business began to borrow money from the plaintiff. On April 13, 1931, Kedar, the father of defendants Oharu, Nirmal and Bimal, died, and the business continued to be carried on under the old name of Kedarnath Nirmal Chandra Guha. On July 3, 1931, Nirmal, as managing partner, settled the accounts of the firm up to May 30, 1931, and agreed to pay interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum on the balance due. The account ran on and in due course the plaintiff filed this suit claiming a balance of Rs. 5,116-11-0 against the eight defendants: Oharu, defendant No. 2, Nirmal, defendant No. 3 and Bimal, defendant No. 4, are the sons of Kedar deceased; Kshitish, defendant No. 5, Jyotish, defendant No. 6 and Susil, defendant No. 7 are the sons of Gangadas, deceased, and Sudhir, defendant No. 8 is the son of Suresh deceased, who was the son of Gangadas deceased.

According to the plaintiff, the business Kedarnath Nirmal Chandra was a business of this family which was actively conducted by Nirmal and Susil at Bhagalpur. The plaintiff also contended that Oharu, Bimal and Jyotish were also actively interested.

in the firm, and they claimed that these defendants were not only liable to the extent of the family property but were also personally liable.

The main defence was that this business was not a family business at all but was the business of Nirmal, who had been described as an idler and partially educated man. It is said that the business was created by Kedar to find employment for this somewhat useless son.

The suit out of which this appeal arises, was tried with a large number of other suits, and the evidence led was treated as evidence in all the cases. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the firm Kedarnath Nirmal Chandra was the joint family firm of the defendants and not the personal business of Nirmal. His findings upon this question, however, are somewhat contradictory. At p. 80, Parts I and II of the paper-book, he sums up the position in these words:—

"For these reasons I hold that the firm Kedarnath Nirmal Chandra Guha was the joint family firm of the defendants and was opened by the three brothers Gangadas, Kedar and Ashu, and after the deaths of the former two of their sons became partners of the firm in place of their fathers, and as such, all the defendants are liable for plaintiff's dues."

In this finding the learned Judge seems to suggest that the only persons interested in the business at the commencement were the three brothers, Gangadas, Kedar and Ashu, and that the sons of Kedar and Gangadas only became interested in the business on the death of their fathers. It is, however, clear from an earlier finding that Charu at least was actively interested in the business from its very commencement. At p. 79 the learned Subordinate Judge deals with the evidence concerning Charu's participation in the affairs of this firm. Counsel for the respondents does not challenge the accuracy of the statement of the learned Subordinate Judge. It appears that as early as April 7, 1921, Charu was borrowing money from the Benares Bank to assist the firm. Charu and his father Kedar also raised money to discharge the debts of the firm in 1925. In 1930 Charu transferred Rs. 1,900 from his private account to the firm's account. Again on June 28, 1932, Charu borrowed Rs. 5,000 from the Bank and this amount was credited to the account of the firm. Summing up these transactions, the learned Subordinate Judge says: "These papers go to show that Charu had an important hand in the business of the defendant firm". In fact, these various transactions show that Charu took a very active part in the activities of the firm from its commencement, and there can be no doubt, in my view, that Charu was in the position of a partner in this business from its commencement. He was advancing money to the firm and providing for the payment of its debts. In fact, he appears to have been one of the most important members of the firm. There is also abundant evidence to show that later, when this firm got into difficulties, Charu was taking an active interest in its affairs. The Benares Bank was a creditor of this firm for a very substantial amount, and at pp. 15, 16 and 17 (Part III of the paper-book) are printed letters passing between the Benares Bank and the defendant Charu. These letters make it clear that at a time, namely, 1931, Charu was taking an active interest in the financial affairs of the firm and was endeavouring to make arrangements for payment to the Bank. At p. 30 (Part III of the paper-book) there is printed a most important letter from Charu to Rai Bahadur Bansidhar Dhandhanian, the proprietor of the plaintiff firm. This letter undoubtedly refers to the debt which is the subject-matter of this suit. In this letter he makes it clear that he was actively interested in the affairs of the firm, and he refers to the debtors of the firm as "our debtors" and to the creditors of the firm as "our creditors". In this letter Charu clearly admitted his interest in the firm.

There can be no doubt that Charu was interested in this firm; but it has been contended by Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick on behalf of the respondents that he can only be made liable to the extent of his share of the family property. According to Mr. Mullick, the only persons who could be made liable personally were the two persons Nirmal and Sushil, who have been held to be the only two members of the family living at Bhagalpur and who were attending to the daily affairs of the business. Sir Manmatha Nath Mukharji on behalf of the appellant has, however, argued that Charu can be made personally liable for this debt, because he was throughout an active member of the firm. He has relied upon a number of cases; but it is unnecessary to refer to them in detail. Sir Manmatha Nath Mukharji agrees that the law is correctly stated at p. 259, Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, 8th Edn. There the learned Author says:

"In the case of an ordinary partnership, it is not only the share of each partner in the partnership property which is liable for the payment of that partnership debts, but the separate property of each partner is also liable. In the case of debts contracted by a manager, in pursuance of his implied authority in the ordinary course of the family business, there is a distinction between the liability of a manager and the liability of his co-partners. The manager is liable not only to the extent of his share in the joint family property, but being a party to the contract, he is liable personally, that is to say, his separate property is also liable. But as regards the other co-partners, they are liable only to the extent of their interest in the family property, unless, in the case of adult co-partners, the contract sued upon, though purporting to have been entered into by the manager alone, is in reality one to which they are actual contracting parties, or one to which they can be treated as being contracting parties by reason of their conduct, or one which they have subsequently ratified...."

According to the appellant, the managing partner contracts not only on behalf of himself but on behalf of all the members of the firm who are taking an active part in the conduct of its affairs. The first loan in this case was taken by Kedar and Nirmal, and later payments made from time to time by Nirmal. Nirmal settled the accounts; but can it be said that Nirmal throughout was merely acting for himself or was he acting as agent for the other members of the firm who were actively interested in it? As I have stated, Charu was certainly very active in this firm from its very commencement, and in my view, it can well be said that he must be treated as one of the contracting parties to this loan.

Mr. Sushil Madhav Mullick, however, argued that Charu can never be liable in respect of this transaction, no matter how active an interest he took in the affairs of the firm after the death of his father. It is contended that during his lifetime Charu had no interest in the property as the family was governed by the Dayabhag School of Hindu Law. Accordingly it is urged that on his father's death Charu could not be personally liable for any debt contracted by the family firm before he acquired an interest in it. That argument in general may well be sound; but the position is different in the present case. As I have already pointed out, Charu took a very active interest in the affairs of this firm from the very outset, and he was advancing money and helping to finance the firm certainly as early as 1921. It appears to me upon the Judge's findings that the only inference that can be drawn from the facts is that Charu was a partner in this business with his father Kedar and his brother Nirmal and his uncles Gangadas and Ashu. If he was a partner, and an actual partner in the business when this loan was taken, then clearly he was personally liable in respect of it. That personal liability would not cease on the death of his father Kedar and on his acquiring an interest in the family property. In my view, upon the facts of this case, Charu was personally liable for this loan throughout. He had taken an active part in the business from its commencement, and though he was not resident in Bhaga'pur, he still continued to take an active part after the death of Kedar. As I have stated, when creditors were finding difficulty in obtaining payment, letters were written by them to Charu, and in reply to those letters he clearly admits his active interest in the firm. If the facts are regarded from this point of view, the difficult questions of Hindu Law do not arise. This is not a case where Charu first became interested in the firm on his father's death. He was interested along with his father, and on the death of his father, he also acquired an interest in the family property. His personal liability remained, in my view, throughout, and that being so, the decree passed against Charu should have been not only a decree to the extent of his interest in the family property but should also have been a decree against him personally.

Sir Manmatha Nath Mukherji also contended that a personal decree should also have been passed against Bimal, defendant No. 4, and Jyotish, defendant No. 6. He, however, admits that there is no evidence that these two persons ever took an active part in the affairs of this firm, Bimal was the son of Kedar, and there is nothing to show that he took an active interest either during Kedar's lifetime or after his death. Similarly Jyotish who is the son of Gangadas, does not appear to have interested himself actively in the affairs of this firm either during his father's lifetime or after his death. The only possible evidence against these two persons are powers-of-attorney executed by them in favour of Nirmal giving the latter a right to execute a mortgage on their behalf. In my view, these two documents cannot possibly establish that either Bimal or Jyotish was ever actively interested in this firm, and in my judgment, the limited form of the decree passed against them must be sustained.

For the reasons which I have given, I am satisfied that a personal decree should also have been passed against Charu, but in other respects the decree of the Court below cannot be successfully assailed. I would, therefore, allow this appeal in part and direct that a personal decree also should be passed against Charu. As this appeal has partially succeeded and partially failed, I would make no order as to costs in this Court. The order for costs in the Court below will remain unaffected.

U. P. Prevention of Adulteration Act (VI of 1912), ss. 17, 18—Rules framed under s. 16, r. 8—Breach of—Servant or agent of licence-holder if can be charged for breach of r. 8—Offence committed by servant or agent, under s. 17—Master, if liable.

It is only the licence-holder who can be penalized under s. 17, U. P. Prevention of Adulteration Act, if he commits a breach of r. 8 framed under s. 16 of the Act. Any other person, whatever his relation to the licence-holder may be, cannot be rightfully charged with an offence under s. 17 for committing a breach of r. 8 for that rule does not cast any duty upon him.

In view of the fact that there is no specific provision either in the U. P. Prevention of Adulteration Act or in the rules framed under s. 16 making a master liable for any act done by his servant or agent, a master cannot be held liable for an offence committed by his servant or agent under s. 17.

Or. Ref. made by the Sessions Judge, Muzaffarnagar, dated May 20, 1939.

Messrs. A. P. Pandey and Jaganandan Lal, for the Applicants.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Opposite Party.
The Deputy Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Muzaffarnagar, recommending that the conviction and sentence passed upon two persons Murari Lal and Meher Chand for having committed an offence under s. 17, U. P. Prevention of Adulteration Act (Act VI of 1912) should be set aside. The material facts of the case can briefly be stated as follows: Meher Chand is the munim and general manager of a firm styled Sarup Lal Mutsuddi Lal which carries on business at Muzaffarnagar. The firm is owned by Murari Lal who has a son named Bul Chand who was also prosecuted for the same offence but was acquitted by the learned trying Magistrate. It appears that Meher Chand obtained a licence for selling ghee on behalf of the firm. It is not contested that the licence which he so obtained related to a shop No. 94 and had nothing to do with any other building or shop No. 93. On May 24, 1938, the Health Officer of the Muzaffarnagar Municipal Board visited shop No. 94 and asked Meher Chand to let him inspect shop No. 93 which he suspected was being used for storing ghee. Meher Chand said that he did not have the key of shop No. 93 and went away to inform his master Murari Lal. After some time Meher Chand returned with Bul Chand, the son of Murari Lal, who had a bunch of keys with him. Bul Chand told the Health Officer that shop No. 93 was not being used as a godown for storing ghee and the Health Officer had therefore no right to inspect it. Being thus denied access to shop No. 93, the Health Officer left the place and on May 27, 1938, a Sanitary Inspector named D. H. Jafri, who accompanied the Health Officer, made a written complaint to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate charging Bul Chand with an offence under s. 17, U. P. Prevention of Adulteration Act, for having committed a breach of r. 8 framed under s. 16 of the Act. Now s. 16 runs as follows:—

"The Local Govt. may by Notification prescribe that no person shall sell or offer or expose for sale or manufacture or store for sale any specific article of food or drug except under a licence containing such conditions and given by such authority as the Govt. may by the said Notification prescribe."

In the exercise of this power the Local Govt. has issued a Notification No. 912-XVI (P. H.)-332-1927. By this notification the Local Government has framed certain rules which are called, "Butter, Ghee and Fat Licencing Rules, 1930." Rule 8 of these rules runs as follows:—

"A licence-holder shall render all possible facilities for the inspection of his shops, godowns or any other place used for storage, manufacture or sale of articles for which he holds a licence and also for the taking of samples for analysis at all reasonable times to the Medical Officer of Health or to any other officer authorized by a local authority or Govt. for the purpose."

It has been stated above that Bul Chand was the only person charged under s. 17, U. P. Prevention of Adulteration Act in the complaint made by D. H. Jafri on May 27, 1938, but it appears that on July 2, 1938, the Health Officer of the Muzaffarnagar Municipal Board addressed a letter to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate suggesting that Murari Lal and Meher Chand were equally guilty under s. 17 and praying that they should also be summoned to stand their trial for that offence. Acting upon this letter, the learned trying Magistrate summoned these two persons, with the result that they were tried jointly with Bul Chand. In the end, however, the learned trying Magistrate acquitted Bul Chand but found Murari Lal and Meher Chand guilty. Meher Chand and Murari Lal went up in revision to the learned Sessions Judge of Muzaffarnagar who has made this reference with the recommendation that their conviction and sentence should be set aside.

The point taken by the learned Judge as the sole basis for his recommendation is that in summoning Meher Chand and Murari Lal to stand their trial in consequence of the letter addressed by the Health Officer to him in the circumstances stated above, the learned trying Magistrate must be deemed to have taken cognizance of the offence so far as these two persons were concerned, under s. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. O., and it was consequently incumbent upon him under s. 191, Criminal P. O. to inform the accused persons that they had a right to have the case transferred for trial to some other Court and there being nothing to show that this duty was really performed by the learned trying Magistrate, the trial must be held to be invalid. The question whether the letter written by the Health Officer to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate must be deemed to be 'information received from any person other than a Police Officer' and not merely a continuation of the complaint originally made to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate by D. H. Jafri is not quite free from doubt. If the former alternative is accepted, the learned Judge is obviously right in holding that the trying Magistrate took cognizance of the offence under s. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. O. If the other alternative is correct, then that objection cannot validly be taken. I do not, however, propose to discuss this question at all because I find that the recommendation made by the learned Judge can be supported on another and a much stronger ground. The ground is a very simple one. The prosecution rests entirely upon the allegation that a breach of r. 8 framed under s. 16 of the Act was committed by Meher Chand. The evidence on the record also points to the same conclusion except that it also involves Bul Chand, the son of Murari Lal. Now r. 8 is concerned only with a licence-holder and the question which arises for consideration is whether in the present case Meher Chand can be rightly described as the licence-holder within the meaning of r. 8. It is true that Meher Chand made the application for the licence but it was on behalf of the firm of Sarup Lal Mutsuddi Lal. He made the application only in his capacity as the servant of the firm. It is admitted that the proprietor of the firm is Murari Lal. The licence itself contains a description of the licensee, and from that description, it would appear that the licence had been given to the firm of Sarup Lal Mutsuddi Lal situate at No. 94, Sabzi Mandi. This description does not apply at all to Meher Chand. The fact that he was in the service of the firm as a munim or agent cannot, in my judgment, alter the legal position. Upon the fact mentioned above, the licence-holder could be nobody else than Murari Lal, the proprietor of the firm Sarup Lal Mutsuddi Lal to which licence had been issued. It is evident therefore that the breach of r. 8 upon which the prosecution rests was committed by Meher Chand and not by the licence-holder. Under the rule the duty of rendering all possible facilities for inspection has been laid specifically upon the licence-holder and nobody else. It is only the licence-holder who can be penalized under s. 17 of the Act, if he commits a breach of r. 8 framed under s. 16 of the Act. Any other person, whatever his relation to the licence-holder may be, cannot be rightfully charged with an offence under s. 17 of the Act for committing a breach of r. 8 for the simple reason that the rule in question does not cast any duty upon him.

The next question which arises for consideration is whether Murari Lal himself can be deemed to have failed to render all possible facilities for inspection within the meaning of r. 8 because his servant and munim Meher Chand acted as alleged and proved by the prosecution. In view of the fact that there is no specific provision either in the Act or in the rules framed under s. 16 making a matter liable for any act done by his servant or agent, I think the answer must be in the negative. Such specific provisions are to be found, e. g. in the Excise Act, and it is upon the basis of those provisions that a master is punishable for an excise offence even though the offence itself may have been committed by his clerk, servant or agent. It is not suggested by the prosecution in this case that Murari Lal himself was present at the shop and that he did anything to prevent the Health Officer from inspecting shop No. 93. In fact it was specifically pleaded by Murari Lal that he was away from Muzaffarnagar when incident in question took place and returned home some time in the evening. That evidence does not appear to have been believed by the learned trying Magistrate, but the point remains that there is no evidence on the side of the prosecution to rebut that case. In these circumstances I think Murari also could not be rightfully prosecuted under s. 17 of the Act. For these reasons I accept the reference made by the learned Sessions Judge and set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon Murari Lal and Meher Chand. The fine, if any, paid by them shall be refunded, Government of India Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42), s. 205—Refusal of High Court to grant certificate—No appeal lies to Federal Court.

A certificate under s. 205, Govt. of India Act, 1935, is a necessary condition precedent to all appeals to the Federal Court, and if the High Court refuses to grant a certificate, it is not for the Federal Court to enquire into the reasons for the refusal, against which no appeal lies to the Federal Court. 180 Ind. Cas. 550 (1), referred to.

[Their Lordships warned the litigants and the legal profession that there will be no excuse in future for any ignorance of the law; and if the refusal of a High Court to grant a certificate is made hereafter, the ground of any further applications or appeals, the Federal Court shall regard them as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the Court, and deal with them accordingly.]

The appellant in person.

Judgment.—The appellant in this case appears to have begun proceedings against the Governor-General-in-Council in 1937 claiming damages for breach of contract. His application for permission to sue in forma pauperis was rejected by the learned Subordinate Judge who held that the plaint disclosed no cause of action. There were three applications for revision of that decision and all three were rejected by the High Court. The appellant then began new proceedings against a different party, namely, the Governor of the Punjab in Council, claiming damages for the alleged failure of the defendant to see that the law had been enforced, that being the way in which he put his case. In these second proceedings also there was an application for permission to sue in forma pauperis which came up before the learned Subordinate Judge in June of last year, and was dismissed, firstly, because the allegations in the plaint did not disclose any cause of action, and secondly, because the provisions of s. 20 of the Civil P. C. had not been complied with. The appellant applied to the High Court for the revision of this decision, but his application was dismissed. It appears from his formal claim for revision and from what he told us that he had sought to go into the facts and merits of his original action against the Governor-General-in-Council, but was not allowed to do so by the learned Judge of the High Court who rightly observed that it was not competent for him (the Judge) to revise the decision of the High Court in the previous case. The appellant seems to have misunderstood these observations of the learned Judge and to have thought, without justification, that he was being prevented from putting before the Court what he conceived to be his case.

The appellant then appealed to the Federal Court, and it was pointed out to him by the Officials of the Court that the Court could not entertain any appeal from a High Court unless the High Court had first given a certificate under s. 205 of the Constitution Act. On receiving that information, he returned to the High Court and asked for a certificate, which the High Court refused to grant, holding, we must assume, that the case did not involve any question as to the interpretation of the Constitution Act. These being the facts of the case, this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.

A certificate under s. 205 is a necessary condition precedent to all appeals to this Court and if the High Court refuses to grant a certificate, it is not for us to enquire into the reasons for the refusal, against which no appeal lies to this Court. This was decided some months ago in Lakhpatt Ram v. Behari Lal Misir, (1). The application must, therefore, be dismissed, but we desire to add this. We have heard this application at some length not only because the appellant was appearing before us in person, but also because litigants, and possibly lawyers also, may not yet be aware of the previous decision of this Court, to which we have just referred. There will be no excuse in future for any such ignorance of the law; and if the refusal of a High Court to grant a certificate is made hereafter the ground of any further applications or appeals, we shall regard them as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the Court, and deal with them accordingly.

Basement—Right of water—Right to surplus water flowing from another's land through artificial channel, proof of—Riparian rights—Owner of upper holding—Use by, of water for irrigation—Rights of owner of lower holding.

For the plaintiff to prove that he is entitled to the surplus water flowing from the defendant's land to his own land through an artificial channel, he would have to prove that he was entitled to this water by some right of prescription. [p. 803, col. 1.]

The proprietor of an upper tenement who claims the right to dam up a stream and to impound so much of its water as he might find convenient for irrigation, leaving only the surplus, if any, for the use of the proprietors below, can take for the purpose of irrigation so much water only as can be abstracted without materially diminishing what should be allowed to descend. If the amount which is allowed to descend is sufficient to supply the owner of a lower holding with as much water as he needs for his own purpose, it cannot be said that the amount that goes down is materially diminished. Diminished it may be, but not materially diminished, if the owner of the lower holding has enough for his needs. The owner of the lower holding is not entitled to restrain the owner of the upper holding without any proof of damage, actual or to be feared for the future. Debi Pershad Singh v. Joy Nath Singh (2), explained, dictum in 35 Ind. Cas. 356 (1), dissented from.

Sp. S. C. A. from the judgment of the Assistant District Court, Sandoway, in Civil Appeal No. 1 of 1938.

Mr. R. M. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Tun Aung, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff asks that the defendant be directed to remove a bund which he has placed across the bed of a stream. This is the main cause of contention. The plaint also refers to some other bund which the defendant is said to have made. There is, however, no mention of this second bund in the prayer and really I do not quite understand the position with regard to it. In view, however, of the fact that there is no mention of this second bund in the prayer, it is difficult to see what order could be passed with regard to it. Fortunately a proper survey of the plaintiff's land has been made by a patta surveyor in which the various points of interest are noted, and it is, I think, not difficult to see exactly what has happened. The stream runs roughly from north-east to south-west and the plaintiff's and defendant's holdings are on the south-east side of the stream. The stream passes the defendant's holding before it reaches the plaintiff's holding. At a point about half way down the defendant's holding, the bund complained of has been erected. The stream, I gather, is a permanent stream coming down from the hills but there is little or no appreciable water in it during the dry weather. The surveyor was called as a witness by the plaintiff. His evidence shows that the bund has been put across the river so as to block the water course entirely. Just above the bund, however, he has cut what I would describe as a by-pass; so, when the water banked up by the bund rises to a certain level, the surplus water flows down that by-pass and rejoins the bed of the main stream just below the highest point of the plaintiff's holding.

The second obstruction complained of by the plaintiff is somewhere about the middle of the boundary between the holdings of the two parties; but the map shows no regular stream there and the suggestion seems to be that spare water from the defendant's holding was at some time allowed to flow from there into the plaintiff's holding, but it is clearly not by any natural stream. For the water to get from point F—the point where the obstruction is said to have been—to the plaintiff's paddy land, it would have to be conducted across a portion of the plaintiff's holding which is called a garden land. (It is the customary practice to classify all land that is too high or too uneven to be used for paddy cultivation as garden land.) It seems to me therefore that if there is a channel then it must be an artificial one and for the plaintiff to prove that he is entitled to the surplus water flowing from the defendant's land to his own land, he would have to prove that he was entitled to this water by some right of prescription and this he has not attempted to do. It looks to me as though perhaps at some time the defendant used to allow his surplus water to discharge into the plaintiff's land and that now he prefers to let it go in a different direction into the holding of Ma The The. This he would be entitled to do unless the plaintiff had become entitled to the use of this water by prescription. I return now to consideration of the bund which the plaintiff asks may be removed. The lower Appellate Court has quoted a dictum in Kaw La v. Maung Ke (1) in which it is said:

"In order to support an action by one riparian owner to restrain another from diverting the water beyond his riparian tenement, it is not necessary that the plaintiff should prove that he has suffered any damage."

This statement is made on the authority of a Privy Council case, Debi Pershad Singh v. Joynath Singh (2). I have referred to this ruling and nowhere in it can I find any passage which supports this statement. Referring to the proprietor of an upper tenement who claimed the right to dam up a stream and to impound so much of its water as he might find convenient for irrigation, leaving only the surplus, if any, for the use of the proprietors below, it is said that his common law right is to take for the purpose of irrigation so much water only as can be abstracted without materially diminishing what should be allowed to descend. It seems to me that if the amount which is allowed to descend is sufficient to supply the owner of a lower holding with as much water as he needs for his own purpose, it cannot be said that the amount that goes down is materially diminished. Diminished it may be, but not materially diminished, if the owner of the lower holding has enough for his needs. The dictum that the owner of the lower holding is entitled to restrain the owner of the upper holding without any proof of damage, actual or to be feared for the future cannot anywhere be found in the Privy Council ruling referred to. A decree may be passed on actual damage incurred or when the remedy sought is by way of an injunction, when damage can reasonably be feared in the future, but manifestly it is impossible for a man to prevent another one from irrigating his land merely in order that he may have the pleasure of seeing a large volume of water passing his holding. This being the case, it is, I think, necessary to see whether there it is true that the plaintiff has suffered, or is likely to suffer from the effect of this dam, taking into consideration the fact that in addition to the dam the defendant has dug a water-course to enable all the surplus water to rejoin the main channel of the river at a spot where it is available for the plaintiff. It must be remembered that when a permanent stream is dammed, it is impossible to block it up completely. As the water continues to come down, it will rise to the top of the bund and then go off in one direction or another. Even in big schemes for water-works, where water is drawn off in pipes for the use of a city, there must be some escape channel in case more water comes down than is necessary for the use of the city. Once the artificial lake or pond is filled, water will continue to pour in at one end, and unless it goes over the top of the bund, it must escape either into the defendant's holding (in which only a limited quantity of water can be used), or down the escape channel, and what goes down the escape channel is available for the use of the plaintiff and the owners of holdings below him.

Now, taking the patta surveyor, who may be regarded as an unbiased witness, and who was called by the plaintiff, he says that when he visited the plaintiff's paddy land, there was water in it and the plaintiff had already transplanted his paddy. His visit was some time about August. Ko Aye, the headman, also called by the plaintiff, says that Po Kin who holds the land next below the plaintiff was able to get water from the river. And he could only get the water which came through the escape channel, passed the plaintiff's land and reached his land. The other witnesses called by the plaintiff speak of there having been no water in the river after the bund was made. But it seems to me that they are speaking of the land immediately below the bund and above the point where the escape channel rejoins the old river bed. In this portion there can be no water unless the water overflows the defendant's bunds because the plaintiff has put a bund in the old river bed also, at the point marked E, immediately above where the escape channel rejoins the river bed, and in the place between these two bunds, the plaintiff is now growing tobacco. The necessity for the bund at the lower point can only be the fact that were it not for this bund water coming through the escape channel might flow backwards of a distance up the old bed of the stream and this would interfere with the tobacco plantation. Po Kin, the cultivator of the land below the plaintiff's, is called as a witness for the defendant and he says that he gets water on his land not only from the river but also the overflow from the upper paddy land and there is evidence that in the middle of October when the case was tried, there was water in the plaintiff's fields. I cannot see that the plaintiff has made out a case that the supply of water to his paddy land is materially diminished. I think, therefore, that the trial Court was right in dismissing the suit. I allow the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court directing that the bund be opened and restore that of the trial Court dismissing the suit. The respondent will bear the appellant's costs throughout.

Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), ss. 13, 14—Act is retrospective—Federal Court has power in appeal to order matter to be disposed of under ss. 13 and 14—No formal application by judgment-debtor is necessary before obtaining relief under new Act.

The Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939, is retrospective and the Federal Court has power to make such an order on an appeal as the Court below could have made if the case had been heard by them at the date of the appeal, i. e., to order the matter to be disposed of under the provisions of ss. 13 and 14 of the new Act of 1939, the sections which have replaced ss. 16 and 17 of the earlier Act.

No formal application by the judgment-debtor to the Court is necessary before he could obtain relief under the provisions of the new Act, 182 Ind. Cas. 161 (1), followed and explained, Sardar Raghubir Singh, for the Appellant instructed by Mr T. K. Prasad, Agent.

Judgment.—This appeal does not differ in essence from other appeals of the same kind which have been recently before this Court from Bihar. A mortgage decree had been obtained against the appellant's predecessor-in-title for a sum of nearly Rs. 1,50,000, and when execution proceedings were threatened, she sought the protection afforded by ss. 16 and 17 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938 (Act III of 1938). Her application was rejected by the lower Court and, on appeal, by the High Court, on the ground that by a previous decision of the High Court these provisions had been held to be void. Those provisions have now been repealed and re-enacted by the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939 (Act VII of 1939) and cannot now be challenged since the later Act was reserved for the consideration of the Governor-General and subsequently received his assent. This Court has already held in Shyamkant Lal v. Rambhajan Singh (1) that the Act is retrospective and that the Court has power to make such an order on an appeal as the Court below could have made if the case had been heard by them at the date of the appeal. This case is indistinguishable from the case cited and we, therefore, allow the appeal and remit the case to the High Court with a direction to discharge their order of January 30, 1939, and the order of the lower Court dated January 23, 1939, leaving the matter to be disposed of under the provisions of ss. 13 and 14 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939 (Act VII of 1939), the sections which have replaced ss. 16 and 17 of the earlier Act.

Our attention has been drawn to a slight ambiguity in the order passed in Shyamkant Lal's case (1) which might be thought to imply that a formal application by the judgment-debtor to the Court was necessary before he could obtain relief under the provisions of the new Act. We did not intend to imply anything of that kind; and we have modified our order in the present case in order to remove any possible misunderstanding.

There will be no order as to costs.

Where between the parties there is a dual contractual relationship: (i) that of borrower and creditor, and (ii) that of principal and agent and in these dealings, the plaintiff as creditor has demands against the defendant, while the defendant as the principal has independent demands against the plaintiff as his agent, and the items relating to all the dealings are entered in one account, such an account is clearly a mutual, current and open account and under Art. 85, Lim. An absence of a shifting balance is not decisive in case of mutual, open and current accounts, 59 Ind. Cas. 669 (1), relied on.

C. R. from the decree of the Sub-Judge, Jullundur, dated August 22, 1938.

Mr. Prem Nath Bhardwaj, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Roop Chand, for the Respondent.

Order.—The plaintiff firm Ruldu Ram-Daulat Ram through Daulat Ram of Phagwara, Kapurthala State, instituted a suit against Basanta Ram of Mauza Lidar Kalan, District Jullundur, for recovery of Rs. 285-2-3 alleged to be due on dealings between the parties, together with interest at 12 per cent. per annum in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Nawanshahr, District Jullundur. The defendant resisted the suit on various grounds. He pleaded that the suit was not maintainable in the name in which it was brought by the plaintiff, that it was barred by limitation, and that the amount claimed was not due and interest was not payable at the rate charged by the plaintiff. The trial Judge found against the defendant on all these points and after giving a small deduction on account of the price of gunny bags, granted the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 274-13-9. On appeal before the Senior Subordinate Judge it was conceded by the defendant that the findings of the trial Judge on the merits were correct, but the technical pleas relating to the maintainability of the suit in the form in which it was brought and limitation were raised again. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge upheld both these contentions and dismissed the suit. Before me, Counsel for the defendant-respondent frankly admitted his inability to support the decision of the learned Judge on the first point. He conceded that in view of the fact that in the heading of the plaint it was expressly stated that firm Ruldu Ram-Daulat Ram is suing through Daulat Ram and in para (1) of the plaint it was clearly mentioned that Daulat Ram was the sole proprietor of the "firm", the suit must be taken to have been brought by Daulat Ram as the sole proprietor of the "firm" Ruldu Ram-Daulat Ram and was clearly maintainable, even though the "firm" had its place of business outside British jurisdiction."

On the second point, the question for determination is whether Art. 83 or Art. 85 is applicable. It is common ground, that if the former Article applies, the suit is barred, but if the case falls under Art. 85, it is within limitation. In holding that Art. 83 is applicable, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge appears to have entirely misconceived the correct nature of the dealings between the parties. It is clear from the plaint, the letter Ex. P-1, which was admittedly written by the defendant, and the other documents on the record that there existed two separate and independent contractual relationships between them. The defendant used to purchase from third parties at Ludhiana and other places grain in his own name and instead of himself paying the price to those persons he used to instruct them to send hundis to the plaintiff and also to send him the grain. The plaintiff retired the hundis and debited the defendant with the amount so paid. The plaintiff then stored the grain as the defendant's agent, and on instructions received from him, sold it and credited the price to the defendant and debited him with brokerage, commission and other incidental charges. It is thus clear that there was dual contractual relationship between them: (i) that of borrower and creditor, and (ii) that of principal and agent. In these dealings, the plaintiff as creditor had demands against the defendant, while the defendant as the principal had independent demands against the plaintiff as his agent, and the items relating to all the dealings were entered in one account.

Such an account is clearly a mutual, current and open account and under Art. 85 a suit for recovery of the amount due on it may be brought within three years from the close of the year in which the last item admitted or proved is entered in the account. Various rulings were cited by Counsel for the parties, but it is not necessary to discuss them in detail, as each case proceeded on its own peculiar facts. Reference may, however, be made to Ratan Chand Jwala Das v. Asa Singh Bhoga Singh (1), Firm Bihari Lal Jai Narayan v. Har Narain Das (2) and Madhav Motiram v. Jairam Sakham (3) the facts of which were very similar to those of the present case and in which Art. 85 was held applicable. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has relied upon several rulings but he has not considered that dealings in them were of a wholly different character. In Manghi Ram v. Ram Saran Das Maman Chand (4) the plaintiff had entered into badni transactions of purchase and sale of grain on behalf of the defendant and these transactions had resulted in losses to third parties; the plaintiff sued to recover the amount of these losses from the defendant and it was held that Art. 83 applied and not Art. 61, Art. 65 or Art. 115. In that case, as also in Bhagwan Das-Giani Ram v. Mutsaddi Lal (5), Devi Sahai Ramji Das v. Tirath Ram, 73 Ind. Cas. 143 (6), Kirpa Ram-Lachhman Das v. Sawan Mal-Gopi Chand (7), Bhagat Ram-Anant Ram v. Harjas Mal-Mehr Chand (8) and Ganesh Das v. Narsingh Das, 115 Ind. Cas. 717 (9) relied upon by the learned Judge, the transactions between the parties were of one type only and the relationship of principal and agent alone existed; consequently Art. 83 was held applicable. In Kadri Pershad Chhedi Lal v. Har Bhagwan (10) also, the facts were different and the dispute was whether the case was governed by Art. 83 or Art. 120. No question of applicability of Art. 85 arose. In Kahn Chand Dula Ram v. Firm Dayaram-Amrit Lal, 115 Ind. Cas. 764 (11) the dealings were originally on a mutual, current and open account, but that account had been closed and a balance struck. A suit brought on this balance was held to be governed by Art. 65 and not Art. 85, the terminus a quo being the date of the balance and not the last deal of the year in the original account. It will be seen, that the facts in the case before us are quite different, and none of these decisions is of any assistance.

The learned Counsel for the respondent, while agreeing that there was a dual contractual relationship between the parties, urged that the account was nonetheless not a mutual, current and open account, as the balance was always against the defendant-respondent. But as pointed out in Ratan Chand Jwala Das v. Asa Singh Bhoga Singh (1) and Dau Dayal v. Pearey Lal (12) the absence of a shifting balance is not decisive: see also cases collected in Chitaley's Lim. Act. Vol. 2, p. 1362 et seq. There is no doubt that the present case is governed by Art. 85 and as the last item in the account is dated April 3, 1934, the suit, instituted on December 19, 1936, is clearly within time. On the merits, the defendant accepted the finding of the trial Court before the Senior Subordinate Judge and expressly abandoned the grounds relating thereto which had been raised in the memorandum of appeal. These points, therefore, cannot be agitated again. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has entirely misconceived the case and his decision cannot be maintained. I accept the petition for revision, set aside the judgment and decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 15-D—Suit for account of mortgage requiring setting aside of sale of equity of redemption, if maintainable.

Suit claiming merely an account of the mortgage which requires setting aside of the equity of redemption is not maintainable under s. 15-D, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. 9 Ind. Cas. 393 (1), 36 Ind. Cas. 517 (2), 80 Ind. Cas. 763 (3), 92 Ind. Cas. 628 (4) and 113 Ind. Cas. 381 (5), relied on, 148 Ind. Cas. 1145 (6) and 146 Ind. Cas. 165 (7), distinguished.

S. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 150 of 1934.

Messrs. B. R. Ambedkar and B. G. Modak, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. G. Chitale, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The only question arising in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs' suit for an account of a mortgage under s. 15-D, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, is maintainable. The plaintiffs' grandfather Yesnak and his three brothers mortgaged their joint family property for a period of twenty years on May 11, 1865, each of the four brothers having a one-fourth share in the property. The plaintiffs' grandfather Yesnak had three sons, Devnak, Vitnak and Ratannak. The plaintiffs and defendant No. 5, Jiva are the sons of Vitnak, and Gourya is the son of Ratannak. On July 2, 1901, Devnak, on his own behalf and as guardian of Gourya, passed a sale-deed in favour of the mortgagee, purporting to convey the one-fourth share of Yesnak in the equity of redemption. The plaintiffs and defendant No. 5 were then minors, but their names were not mentioned in the sale-deed (Ex. 47). The plaintiffs, therefore, brought this suit for an account of the mortgage so far as their one-twelfth share in the property mortgaged was concerned. The trial Court held that the suit was maintainable, and on taking an account, it declared that nothing was due under the suit mortgage. In appeal the learned District Judge following the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Bachi v. Bickchand (1), held that such a suit which required the setting aside of the sale of the equity of redemption was not maintainable under s. 15-D, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

In Bachi v. Bickchand (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act gave extraordinary reliefs, in certain cases specified under the Act, and that although a suit may in form be a suit for redemption if in reality it was a suit to recover property of which the rightful owner had been deprived by fraud, a suit under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was not maintainable. In that case a mortgage was executed by three persons named Saindino, Mitho and Sachedino, in favour of two of the respondents, viz., Bickchand and Dipchand, mortgaging 500 acres of land for a sum of Rs. 1,700. Subsequently one of the mortgagors Mitho and his brother Mirzan sold 122 acres out of the 500 acres to the mortgagees in satisfaction of the entire mortgage and thereby redeemed the remaining 378 acres of land. Bickchand and Dipchand had thus become the full owners of 122 acres of land and they sold them to one Kherajmal and gave them into his possession. Sachedino and Saindino, who had not joined Mitho in the sale-deed, having died, their heirs filed a suit against the original mortgagees and their transferor Kherajmal to redeem the mortgage under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, alleging that they were not bound by the sale-deed of Mitho and his brother Mirzan. The Privy Council then held that the special relief under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act could not be granted in a suit which, though not in form, was in reality a suit to set aside the alienation by two of the mortgagors. This ruling was followed in several cases: Chandabhai v. Ganpati (2), Krishnaji v. Sadanand (3), Vishvanathbhai v. Mallappa (4), and Chandika Prasad v. Shivappa (5). In the last case the suit was filed for the redemption of a mortgage under the special provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and although it was held on the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Bachi v. Bickchand (1), that it was not competent to the plaintiffs to resort to the special provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, still the suit could be treated as one brought in the ordinary way for setting aside the sale by one of the mortgagors and for redeeming the mortgage if the sale be set aside. Such a relief cannot be granted in the present suit since no redemption is claimed but merely an account of the mortgage is asked for under provisions of s. 15-D, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. Such accounts cannot be claimed in an ordinary suit, but they are a special privilege given to an agriculturist by the provisions of s. 15-D, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which enables an agriculturist to file a suit valuing his claim even at Rs 5 only. All the cases above referred to have been summarized by Shingne, J. in Ganesh v. Rajaram (6). In that case the mortgage was admitted, but it was alleged that the mortgage had been extinguished by adverse possession, and Shingne, J. held that it was permissible to bring a suit for redemption of the mortgage under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, although in deciding it, the Court had to determine whether the plaintiff's share in the mortgaged property was lost by adverse possession or to determine the extent of his share. In coming to that conclusion, he distinguished the ratio decidendi adopted in the previous cases. He observed (p. 1130*) :

"In all these cases, excepting the last one, there were subsequent transfers of the mortgaged property—or rather of the equity of redemption. They were impediments in the way of redemption and unless they were got rid off, the way to redemption was not clear but was blocked."

In the present case also, the sale-deed executed by Devnak is an impediment in the way of redemption and unless that sale is got rid off, the way to redemption is not clear, but is blocked. This view was taken both in Chandabhai v. Ganpati (2), and Krishnaji v. Sadanand (3). In Savant v. Bharmappa (7), the learned Chief Justice held that an agriculturist mortgagor could sue for an account under s. 15-D, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, although the suit might involve a preliminary inquiry whether the transaction in suit was a mortgage or a sale. In that case after the property was mortgaged, the equity of redemption had not been extinguished, but the mortgage was evidenced by a sale-deed and the question was whether the transaction represented by that sale deed was really a mortgage or an absolute sale. If the transaction was held to be a mortgage, then there was no impediment in the way of its redemption. Thus the cases which the learned Chief Justice and Shingne, J. had to consider in the two rulings reported in Ganesh v. Rajaram (6), and Savant v. Bharmappa (7), stand on a different footing. The present case is more analogous to the other cases referred to by me where a suit for redemption under s. 15-D, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, was held to be not maintainable. I therefore agree with the view taken by the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

The provision of the Civil P. O., by which orders passed under s. 47 amount to decrees is not applicable to proceedings in the Revenue Courts under the Agra Ten. Act. No second appeal, therefore, lies against an appellate order passed in execution proceedings by a Revenue Court.

Ex. S. As. from the decision of the District Judge, Aligarh, dated December 16, 1937.

Mr. Shabd Saran, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shiv Charan Lal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal against an appellate order passed in execution proceedings by a Revenue Court. There is a preliminary objection that no appeal lies and I think this must be upheld. Under s. 264, Agra Ten. Act the provisions of the Civil P. O. apply only if they are not inconsistent with anything in the Act. Now the Act defines a decree in s. 3 (14) as any order which so far as the Revenue Court is concerned, finally disposes of a suit. It follows that the provision of the Civil P. O. by which orders passed under s. 47 amount to decree is not applicable to proceedings in the Revenue Courts under the Agra Ten. Act. A special provision has been made in the Act under s. 248 for appeals from such orders, and it is to be noticed that these appeals are as against orders and not as against decrees. Now it is stated in s. 249 that no appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal. The result is that no appeal lies in this case and the memorandum of appeal is rejected with costs. This judgment also governs the connected Second Appeal No. 415 of 1938. Leave to appeal under the Letters Patent is refused.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 7—Guardian, appointment of—Considerations in—Question, if can be settled by compromise between rival claimants—Appointment of guardian for minor's property—Enquiry regarding minor's property should be made—Enquiry, nature of.

What the Court has to consider in appointing a guardian is the welfare of the minors on evidence produced before it and not to pass judgment in accordance with the terms of a compromise entered into between the persons contesting for guardianship. It is the duty of the Court to consider whether or not the compromise is in the interests of the minors. 112 Ind. Cas. 451 (1), Mahadeo Prasad v. Biadashri Prasad (2), 84 Ind. Cas. 613 (3), referred to.

In an application for the guardianship of property of a minor, it must be shown that the minor has some separate property as without that there is no foundation for the application. It is true that an enquiry for the purposes of the Guardians and Wards Act is not meant to be a lengthy and elaborate enquiry, but there must be some basis for finding that there is some property at all. If the deceased father of the minor was governed by the Muhammadan Law, then the widow is entitled to her share and the balance would be the property of the minors of which a guardian could be appointed. If on the other hand this person was governed by the Customary Law, then his widow takes a widow's estate and during her lifetime the minors have no right in this property except for maintenance. No guardian of the minors can, in such circumstances, take possession of such property in the lifetime of the widow. [p. 810, col. 1]

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Sayad Mohsin Shah, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The following pedigree table will help in understanding the facts of this case.

The paternal uncle of the three minor daughters of Mohammad Alam applied to be appointed guardian of their person and property and the application was opposed by their mother. In opposing this application the mother, Mst. Hassan Bi, filed a written statement on August 26, 1938, in which she stated: Muzhira har tarah se apni jaidad wa babalighan ka achhi tarah se intizam kar sakti hai aur karti rahi hai (I can and have been making adequate arrangements for the management of my property and of the minors). The implication of this statement appears to be that the property in the possession of Hassan Bi belongs to herself and that the minors have no property to all. The statement of one of the minors, Mst. Iqbal Jan, was recorded on October 14, 1938, to the effect that she preferred to stay with Hassan Bi and not with her paternal uncle. No further evidence was recorded and the parties entered into a compromise and the statements of Hassan Bi and Nek Alam were recorded. In accordance with the terms of this compromise, the Court appointed Nek Alam, guardian of the property of the minors and Hassan Bi as the guardian of the person of the minors, ordering that Nek Alam, as guardian of the property, should pay Rs 30 per mensem to the guardian of the person of the minors for their maintenance and further that he should file a security bond for Rs. 1,000 with two sureties. An appeal from the order of the Guardian Court has been preferred by Mst. Hassan Bi through Mr. Shamir Chand and is resisted by Sayad Mohsin Shah.

The main ground of attack is that the real point at issue in the case was not brought out or considered by the Court below and that the decision by way of compromise was illegal and ulter vires. It seems to me that there is considerable force in this objection. What the Court had to consider was the welfare of the minors on evidence produced before it and not to pass judgment in accordance with the terms of a compromise. It was the duty of the Court to consider whether or not the compromise was in the interests of the minors and there is nothing in the judgment of the Court below to indicate that this aspect, which is after all the overriding consideration in such cases, was considered by the Court at all. It is clear law that the minor is entitled to the judgment of the Court on this crucial matter. In making an order in the terms of a compromise, the Court has virtually handed over its functions of judgment to the contesting parties. In Ma Ngwe Nyun v. Ma Thwe (1), it has been held that the selection of a guardian by arbitrators is illegal and that it is for the Court, and not the arbitrators, to be satisfied that it is for the welfare of a minor that a guardian should be appointed and if to be appointed who that person should be. The State is the guardian of all its minor subjects and the question of guardianship is not one of the private civil rights of any private person which he is by law allowed to submit to arbitration. See in this connection Mahadeo Prasad v. Bindeshari Prasad (2) and Samid Chetty v. Adaikalam Chetty (3). If such a matter could not be settled by arbitrators appointed by the contesting applicants for guardianship, it could no more be settled by an agreement by such persons. This appears to me to be a fatal objection to the procedure adopted by the learned Guardian Judge and therefore to the order under appeal.

Further, it appears to me that there is nothing on the record, other than an inference from the statement of Hassan Bi made at the time of the compromise, to show that the minors have any property at all of which a guardian should be appointed. The property in this case belonged to the deceased father of the minors. If this person was governed by the customary law, then Hassan Bi takes a widow's estate, and during her lifetime, the minors have no right in this property except for maintenance. No guardian of the minors can, in such circumstances, take possession of such property in the lifetime of Hassan Bi. If, on the other hand, the deceased father Mohammad Alam was governed by the Muhammadan Law then the widow is entitled to her share and the balance would be the property of the minors of which a guardian could be appointed. No enquiry, however summary, on the question whether the minors had any property and if so, what was made and Nek Alam has been appointed guardian of the property without specifying what it is. In Banamli Patra v. Arjun Sen (4), it was held by a Division Bench that in an application for the guardianship of a minor governed by the Mitakshara Law, it must be shown that the minor has some separate property as without that there is no foundation for the application. It is true that an enquiry for the purposes of the Guardians and Wards Act is not meant to be a lengthy and elaborate enquiry but there must be some basis for finding that there is some property at all. As I have said, in this case either the minors have no property or only a share in the property of Mohammad Alam and at least in a summary way it should have been determined what that property was. If on such summary enquiry the Guardian Court had found that the parties were governed by custom, then obviously there was no occasion for the appointment of a guardian of the property. If, on the other hand, they were governed by the personal law then the guardian could only be appointed with respect to the share of the minors in the property of Mohammad Alam. From the order it appears that by compromise Nek Alam has been appointed guardian of the property of the minors assuming it to be the whole of the property left by Mohammad Alam. It appears to me, for the reasons stated above, that the Court has declined to exercise its proper functions and omitted to consider these crucial points in the case. I accordingly set aside the order passed by the learned Guardian Judge, Rawalpindi, and direct him to take such evidence as the parties wish to adduce and decide the application for guardianship in the light of the observations made above. The appeal is accordingly accepted but in view of the circumstances, I make no order as to the costs of this Court. The other costs will be costs in the case. Parties will appear before the Guardian Judge, Rawalpindi, on July 31, 1939.

Execution Case No. 74 of 1938

SRI KISSEN MACKAR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Calcutta High Court (Original Side) Rules, Chap. XXXVLI, r. 77—Sheriff's right to poundage, nature of—Attachment by him under precept issued under Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 46—Claim under decree satisfied on compromise—Sheriff, if entitled to poundage.

The Sheriff has no Common Law right to reward for executing a writ. The Sheriff is not engaged by the litigant to realize the decree. There is no privity between the Sheriff and the litigant. The latter applies to the Court for the enforcement of its own decree and it is the Court that employs the Sheriff as one of its officers to enforce its orders. If the Sheriff is to be remunerated for such services, it is a matter between the Court and the Sheriff with which the litigant has no direct concern. If the Court or the Legislature consider that the Sheriff should receive remuneration, it is for those authorities to make provision by rule or statute for such remuneration, and in doing so they may undoubtedly levy fees on the litigant. Such rule or statute being a taxing rule or statute must be strictly construed so as to guard against any enlargement of its scope to the detriment of the subject who, but for such rule or statute, would be under no liability to pay. 70 Ind. Cas. 488 (1), referred to. [p. 812, col. 1.]

There are two sets of circumstances under which the Sheriff can get poundage (a) where the Sheriff levies a sum in execution, and (b) where the claim in respect of which the Sheriff has taken steps to levy a sum in execution is satisfied, compromised or settled. The alternative portion of the rule is not independent of the first portion; the Sheriff is not entitled to poundage under the second portion of the rule unless he has taken steps under the first portion of the rule with a view to levying a sum in execution. An order issuing a precept is not an order directing execution and the attachment under a precept under s. 46, Civil P. C., is not an attachment in execution proceedings. The attachment under s. 46, Civil P. C., is merely a step taken to facilitate execution; it is not a step taken in the proceedings in execution. So where the Sheriff has attached certain property pursuant to a precept issued under s. 46, and the claim under the decree has been satisfied on compromise entered into after such attachment, the Sheriff is not entitled to poundage. 90 Ind. Cas. 527 (2), applied, 70 Ind. Cas. 488 (1), relied on.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee (Jr.), for the Applicant.

Mr. H. D. Bose, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The only point for determination in this application is whether the Sheriff of Calcutta who attached certain property pursuant to a precept issued to this Court by a Court at Benares is entitled to poundage, the claim under the decree having been satisfied on a compromise entered into after such attachment. One Rai Kissenji brought a suit against the petitioner in the Court of the Civil Judge at Benares and got a decree for over two lacs of rupees. Thereafter the decree-holder applied under s. 46, Civil P. C., to the Court at Benares for the issue of a precept to this Court for the attachment of certain property belonging to the petitioner at Calcutta. The precept was issued and under orders of this Court, the Sheriff attached the properties some time in January 1938. As an attachment under a precept lapses after the termination of two months' the period of attachment was extended from time to time. In the meantime the decree was transmitted to this Court for execution, but no application for execution was made in this Court. In December 1938, while the attachment was still subsisting, the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor entered into a compromise whereby inter alia the judgment-debtor agreed to pay the decree-holder the sum of Rs. 1,05,000 in full settlement of the decretal dues by March 1, 1939. The judgment debtor also agreed to pay to the decree-holder all costs incurred by the decree-holder from and after December 19, 1938. The sum agreed upon as liquidating the decretal dues was paid within the stipulated time and a sum of Rs. 3,000 has been deposited in payment towards costs with the solicitor of the decree-holder. On March 20, 1939, the attachment ceased to exist as no further application was made to extend the period of the attachment. The Sheriff, however, refuses to release the property on the ground that his poundage has not been paid. The petitioner has therefore applied for an order for the release of the attachment upon payment of only the actual costs incurred by the Sheriff without poundage.

The contention of the Sheriff is that as the compromise has been effected and the amount under the compromise has been realized as a result of or at any rate under pressure of the attachment levied by him, he is entitled to a poundage under the rules of this Court. On behalf of the petitioner the contention broadly put is that as the attachment has not been effected in execution proceedings, it cannot be said that the amount has been realized as a result of any action by the Sheriff in execution and that therefore the Sheriff is not entitled to poundage. Learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioner states that his client is perfectly willing to pay the Sheriff his poundage if it is held that the Sheriff is entitled to the same and that he is not going to contend that the Sheriff should realize his poundage from anybody else or by any other proceedings or that the amount of poundage claimed is incorrect. The only question for decision therefore is whether in the circumstances related above the Sheriff is at law entitled to poundage. The nature of the right of the Sheriff to poundage has been elaborately discussed in A. D. Pickford v. Janaki Nath Roy (1). The Sheriff has no common law right to reward for executing a writ. The Sheriff is not engaged by the litigant to realize the decree. There is no privity between the Sheriff and the litigant. The latter applies to the Court for the enforcement of its own decree and it is the Court that employs the Sheriff as one of its officers to enforce its orders. If the Sheriff is to be remunerated for such services, it is a matter between the Court and the Sheriff with which the litigant has no direct concern. If the Court or the Legislature consider that the Sheriff should receive remuneration, it is for those authorities to make provision by rule or statute for such remuneration, and in doing so, they may undoubtedly levy fees on the litigant. Such rule or statute being a taxing rule or statute, must be strictly construed so as to guard against any enlargement of its scope to the detriment of the subject who but for such rule or statute would be under no liability to pay. So far as this Court is concerned, poundage is a charge authorized by Items Nos. 22 and 23 of r. 77 of Chap XXXVI, of the rules of this Court. We are concerned in this case with Item No. 22 which is as follows:

"The fees allowed to the Sheriff and his officers shall be as follows: Poundage on sums levied by the Sheriff in execution or in the event of the claim being satisfied, compromised or settled, upon the amount of such satisfaction, composition or settlement for the first Rs 1,000 at 5 per cent and for the next at 2½ per cent."

It will be noticed that there are two parts to the rule, one part deals with the case where a sum is levied by the Sheriff in execution of a decree and the other with the case where the parties settle the claim. The Sheriff is said to levy a sum when he realizes it by converting the property seized by him into money or when he receives the sum from the judgment-debtor who wishes to avoid or lift the attachment. We are not concerned with the first part of the rule as no sum has been levied by the Sheriff. We are concerned with the alternative portion of the rule, viz., when the claim has been settled. This portion of the rule has been explained, if I may say so with respect, very clearly by Rankin, J. in the case mentioned above. In explaining the words "the claim" he says that they do not mean "any and every claim which one party may have against the other but the particular claim which was the subject-matter of execution. In other words, the claim must be one in respect of which the Sheriff took steps in execution under the first part of the rule. In this view he held that where subsequent to an attachment before judgment the parties compromised the claim, the Sheriff was not entitled to poundage inasmuch as the attachment before judgment was not an attachment for the purpose of levying a sum in execution but an attachment made merely for the purpose of preserving the property in medio pending the decision of the suit and inasmuch as the claim settled was not one in respect of which execution had been levied.

Thus there are two sets of circumstances under which the Sheriff can get poundage (a) where the Sheriff levies a sum in execution, and (b) where the claim in respect of which the Sheriff has taken steps to levy a sum in execution is satisfied, compromised or settled. It is clear that the alternative portion of the rule is not independent of the first portion: the Sheriff is not entitled to poundage under the second portion of the rule unless he has taken steps under the first portion of the rule with a view to levying a sum in execution. Now in this case what has been done by the Sheriff? Has he taken any steps to levy a sum in execution? In my opinion he has not. The attachment is one under s. 46, Civil P. O. Under that section upon application by the decree-holder in proper circumstances, the Court, which passed the decree, will issue a precept to another Court to attach certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor pending orders for execution of the decree. The attachment is made not for the purpose of converting the property attached into money for the realization of the decree but for the purpose of keeping the property of the judgment-debtor in medio until the decree can be executed. It is similar to an attachment before judgment in this sense. It is not an attachment in execution but an attachment before execution.

After there is an attachment pursuant to a precept under s. 46, Civil P. O. further steps have to be taken before the decree can be executed. First there must be an application under s. 39 of the Code to the Court which passed the decree for transmission of the decree to the Court which is to execute the decree. Then there must be an application for execution of the decree to the Court to which the decree has been transferred and the application must be in tabular form as provided in O. XXI, r. 11, Civil P. O. when the executing Court is not the High Court. If the Court to which the decree has been transferred is the High Court, then the application for execution must be in Form I of the rules of this Court and must contain in addition to the particulars mentioned in O. XXI, r. 11, certain other particulars (vide Chap. XVII, r. 10 of the Original Side Rules). It is thus clear that after an attachment under a precept there must be an application for execution in the proper form and it is only upon such application that execution can issue. The order issuing a precept is, therefore, not an order directing execution and the attachment under a precept is not an attachment in execution proceedings. In Kasiswar De v. Aswini Kumar Pal (2) it was held that an application for an attachment under s. 46, Civil P. O. cannot be regarded as an application for execution. This was a case regarding rateable distribution but the principle underlying this view applies.

In the present case, although the decree has been transferred to this Court, there has as yet been no application for execution. Learned Counsel for the Sheriff draws my attention to the fact that s. 46, Civil P. O. is to be found in a portion of the Code entitled "Execution" and he argues that the attachment is really an attachment in execution. In my opinion the fact that the attachment has been made in accordance with the provisions of a section appearing in a portion of the Code entitled: "Execution," does not make the attachment an attachment in execution. This portion of the Code deals with matters leading up to execution as well as with matters regarding execution itself. The attachment under s. 46, Civil P. O. is merely a step taken to facilitate execution; it is not a step taken in the proceedings in execution. As stated before, the Sheriff's right to poundage is a right granted by the provisions of r. 77 of Chap. XXXVI, of the Rules of the Original Side of this Court; in my view, that rule comes into operation only when the Sheriff has taken steps to levy sums in execution of a decree. I have held that no such steps have been taken in the present case. The Sheriff is, therefore, not entitled to any poundage. The result is that the application must be allowed with costs.

(2) A I R 1926 Cal. 249; 90 Ind. Cas. 527

Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869), s. 23 (5) —Powers of transfer under—Jurisdiction—Objection to—Waiver—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 13, s 115—Order reversing preliminary decree on ground of want of jurisdiction—Setting aside of—Proper form of remedy.

The powers of transfer conferred by s. 23 (5), Bom. Civil Courts Act, on the Court are controlled by the provisions of s. 24, Civil P. O. and are necessarily limited to administrative orders allocating business. Hence, the order of transfer purporting to have been made under cl. (5) of s. 23, Bom. Civil Courts Act, after another Subordinate Judge has taken cognizance of the suit, is incompetent, 158 Ind. Cas. 382 (1), relied on. [p. 814, col. 2.]

Where jurisdiction over the subject-matter exists requiring only to be invoked in the right way, the party, who has invoked or allowed the Court to exercise it in a wrong way, cannot afterwards turn round and challenge the legality of the proceedings. [p. 815, col. 2.]

Where therefore, the defect in the jurisdiction of the Court arises due to the irregularity in the commencement of the proceedings before the transferee Court and the parties lead evidence concurring in the Court's assumption of jurisdiction under a wrong order of transfer, the concurrence of the parties amounts to consent and their conduct is tantamount to a waiver of objection to jurisdiction. They cannot, therefore, subsequently object to jurisdiction. Ledgard v. Bull (3), relied on, 158 Ind. Cas. 382 (1), distinguished.

The more appropriate form of remedy to set aside an order reversing a preliminary decree on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction, is by a civil revision application. 156 Ind. Cas. 662 (2), relied on.

Nos. 1 and 2.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the order of the District Judge of Surat reversing the preliminary decree passed by the Extra Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge of Surat in a suit for administration and accounts on the ground that the decree was passed without jurisdiction. The appellant is the plaintiff in whose favour the decree was passed in the trial Court. The suit was originally instituted in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat. There was a Joint First Class Subordinate Judge attached to that Court, and the suit upon its registration was transferred to his Court on February 3, 1930. The Joint First Class Subordinate Judge framed issues on August 11, 1932, and ordered a commission to issue for the examination of certain witnesses on March 9, 1933. At that stage the First Class Subordinate Judge withdrew the suit, and transferred it to the Court of the Extra Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge, who ultimately decided it three years thereafter on July 8, 1933, after considering the voluminous evidence recorded in the case. In first appeal from that decision, the learned District Judge relying upon Shankarji Samalji Dhobi v. Vrajlal Bapalal Patil (1), thought that the order of transfer made by the First Class Subordinate Judge was without jurisdiction, as the Court from which the suit was withdrawn had already taken cognizance of the case. Accordingly, he held that the decree passed by the Extra Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge was a nullity, and quashed it, and ordered a re-trial by the Joint First Class Subordinate Judge from the stage at which it was sent to the Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court. The plaintiff filed a second appeal against that order, and, under instructions of the office, that appeal was described as an appeal from order. As an extra precaution the plaintiff also filed a civil revisional application which is No. 471 of 1937. Therefore, the question as to the form, which the application to set aside the order of the District Judge should take, becomes academic, although, in my opinion, in view of the decision in Motibhai Jesinghbhai Patil v. Ranchhodbhai Shambhubhai Patil (2), the more appropriate remedy will be by a civil revisional application. I have, therefore, treated the appeal as a civil revisional application. The transfer of the suit was made apparently in accordance with the practice prevailing in the mofusil in the matter of allocating business to particular Judges attached to the Subordinate Judge's Courts. That practice which has been referred to in Shankarji Samalji Dhobi v. Vrajlal Bapalal Patil (1), seems still to continue. It is presumably based upon the provisions of s. 23, Bom. Civil Courts Act of 1869. Clause (5) of that section provides that :

"A Subordinate Judge.... appointed or deputed to assist in the Court of another Subordinate Judge shall dispose of such civil business within the limits of his pecuniary jurisdiction as may, subject to the control of the District Judge, be referred to him by the Judge of such Court."

Undoubtedly, the Judge of the Court in question was a First Class Subordinate Judge, and the jurisdiction was clearly assumed under the supposed powers of transfer conferred on him by cl. (5) of s. 23. If, as has been held in Shankarji Samalji Dhobi v. Vrajlal Bapalal Patil (1), those powers are controlled by the provisions of s. 24, Civil P. C., and are necessarily limited to administrative orders allocating business, then, undoubtedly, the order of transfer purporting to have been made under cl. (5) of s. 23, Bombay Civil Courts Act, after another Subordinate Judge had taken cognizance of the suit, was incompetent. On the other hand, if the phrase "shall dispose of such civil business as may be referred to him" confers a wider jurisdiction, then the District Judge's order under appeal is clearly wrong. I shall, however, assume that Shankarji Samalji Dhobi v. Vrajlal Bapalal Patil (1), is correctly decided. The question then is, whether in the circumstances of this case the principle of waiver of objection to jurisdiction can be invoked. Fundamentally speaking, a judgment of a Court without jurisdiction, would be a nullity. Halsbury (see Halsbury's Laws of England, Edn. 2, Vol. VIII, pp. 531-532, paras. 1176 and 1178) explains what jurisdiction of Courts means, and states the general rule that consent cannot give jurisdiction and that the plea of want of jurisdiction cannot usually be waived. He says:

"By jurisdiction is meant the authority which a Court has to decide matters that are litigated before it or to take cognizance of matters presented in a formal way for its decision."

In Shankarji Samalji Dhobi v. Vrajlal Bapalal Patil (1), the suit which was wrongly transferred had not been decided finally and the question as to waiver of objection did not arise and was not considered. But Courts have drawn a distinction between want of jurisdiction as described by Halsbury and irregularity in the assumption and exercise of jurisdiction. The case in Ledgard v. Bull (3) decided by the Privy Council, is a leading case on the subject. That was a suit for damages and injunction for infringement of a patent. Under the Indian Patents and Designs Act such a suit could only be brought in a District Court, but it was brought in the Court of a Subordinate Judge who had no jurisdiction to entertain it. The suit was eventually transferred from the Subordinate Judge's Court to the District Judge's Court and there heard and decided. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that an order for transfer of a suit from one Court to another under s. 24, Civil P. O., could not be made unless the suit had been brought in a Court having jurisdiction. Their Lordships observed that, although jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent where there is an entire absence of jurisdiction, in a case where the Court is competent to entertain the suit, if it were competently brought, the defendant may be barred by his own conduct from objecting to the irregularities in the institution of the suit, unless the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit. This is what they say (p. 145*) :

"... there are numerous authorities which establish that when, in a cause which the Judge is competent to try, the parties without objection join issue, and go to trial upon the merits, the defendant cannot subsequently dispute his jurisdiction upon the grounds that there were irregularities in the initial procedure, which if objected to at the time, would have led to the dismissal of the suit."

Ultimately on the question as to whether a proper inference of waiver could be drawn, they held that the defendant had not waived the objection and that therefore the decree of the District Judge could not stand. That principle was affirmed in Meenakshi Naidoo v. Subramanya Sastri (4). Mookerjee, J. in Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (5), drew a distinction between total incompetency and mere irregularity in the exercise and assumption of jurisdiction. There are other cases such as Ex parte Prett (6), and Ex parte May (7), which reiterate the same principle that where jurisdiction over the subject-matter exists requiring only to be invoked in the right way, the party, who has invoked or allowed the Court to exercise it in a wrong way, cannot afterwards turn round and challenge the legality of the proceedings. Those cases are cases where the parties had themselves invoked the jurisdiction in an improper way. But it seems to me that the principle would be common to cases where in the preliminary stage in invoking jurisdiction the Court itself has proceeded in a wrong way without the invitation of the parties and where the latter have neglected to question the irregularity; or, in other words, the defect in jurisdiction arises merely by reason of the irregularity in the commencement of the proceedings before the transferee Court: see Kishen Lal v. Jai Lal (8).

Here it cannot be doubted that the First Class Subordinate Judge, in whose Court this suit was originally instituted, was perfectly competent to entertain and try the suit. It cannot also be denied that the Extra Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge had the necessary jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit. Consequently, the principle recognized by the Privy Council in Ledgard v. Bull (3), would apply if a proper inference of waiver can be drawn from the circumstances. It seems to me clear upon the facts of this case that both the parties led evidence concurring in the Court's assumption of jurisdiction under a wrong order of transfer. A large body of evidence was led, as I have said, directly before the Court and considerable expense has been incurred in examining witnesses on commission. The fruit of that effort and expense would be completely lost if the concurrence, which amounts to consent, is not given its legitimate effect in mitigating the consequences of the erroneous order. It seems to me that the conduct of the respondents is tantamount to a waiver of objection of jurisdiction and that Shankarji Samalji Dhobi v. Vrajilal Bapalal Patil (1) which was relied upon for setting aside the decree by the District Judge is clearly distinguishable. Accordingly, I set aside the order of the District Judge, and remand this case to his Court for disposal according to law on the evidence recorded in the suit before the Extra Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge. Consequently, I make the Rule absolute with costs in the civil revisional application, and the appeal from order which shall be treated as part of the former application.

Fraud—Inference of from circumstances—Criterion—Second appeal—Inference drawn from circumstances—Finding involves legal question—Deed—Execution of, by illiterate person upon misrepresentation of its nature—Void or voidable—Limitation—Document void ab initio—Suit to set it aside—No question of limitation arises.

Where fraud is to be inferred from the circumstances, and is not directly proved, those circumstances must be such as to exclude any other reasonable possibility except that of fraud. In other words, the criterion is similar to that which is applicable to circumstantial evidence in criminal cases. [p. 818, col. 1.]

Though a Court of second appeal is not competent to question the soundness of a finding of fact by the Court below, and the decision of the lower Court as to the effect of the evidence must stand final as to the fact, yet the soundness of the conclusions derived from the findings of fact may involve a matter of law and may, therefore, be questioned by a Court of second appeal. Ram Gopal v. Shamskhaton (1), followed. [ibid.]

Where there is no direct evidence of alleged fraud and only an inference is drawn from circumstantial evidence, then the finding involves the legal question as to whether the circumstances are such that the necessary inference can legally be derived. [ibid.]

Dr. D. N. Mitter and Messrs. B. N. Mitter and Ajit Kumar Mitra, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and K. N. Lal, for the Respondent.

Meredith, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants from a decision of Babu Anjani Kumar Sahay, Subordinate Judge at Patna, dated September 20, 1938, setting aside a decision of Babu Bhagwan Prasad, Munsif at Patna, dated August 31, 1937.

The suit was originally instituted by one Titai Singh, as a pauper, for recovery of possession of certain properties, and for mesne profits, on a declaration that a deed of gift, said to have been executed by him on June 18, 1931 in respect thereof, was fraudulent and null and void. The suit was instituted on August 3, 1935. Titai Singh died on September 2, 1936, and an agnate of his, the present respondent, Chaichoo Singh, was substituted as plaintiff in his place on October 12, 1936. The substituted plaintiff paid full court-fees on the subject-matter of the suit. The suit was not heard, or evidence recorded, until 1937. Hence Titai Singh could not be examined as a witness.

The alleged facts upon which the action was brought, were that some ten years before the suit Titai Singh employed the defendant No. 1 to look after his cultivation and his affairs generally, as he had become too old to manage them himself. After some time the defendant No. 1 asked Titai to grant him a lease of his raiya lands in order that he might have an incentive to look after Titai's affairs with greater zeal and care. Titai agreed, and in October, 1928, purchased a stamp paper for the purpose and put his thumb mark thereon. In June, 1931, the defendant No. 1 asked Titai to get the lease registered, whereupon Titai came to Patna, where the defendant No. 1 fraudulently induced Titai to execute a deed of gift in his favour under the impression that he was executing a lease. Shortly afterwards, the defendant No. 1 left Titai uncared for, and went away with all the papers. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 thereupon, finding Titai helpless, dispossessed him from the suit land, representing themselves to be purchasers from the defendant No. 1 as a donee of Titai. Titai thereupon got inquiries made and learnt of the fraud that had been practised upon him. Hence the plaintiff's suit for a declaration that the deed of gift was void and that the defendants had acquired no title to the lands.

The defence was that there was no fraud in execution of the deed of gift, that it was validly executed and was acted upon that the defendant No. 1 having acquired a good title thereunder made a bona fide sale of $4\frac{1}{2}$ bighas of the land and the house to the defendant No. 2 for a sum of Rs. 1,400 and 1 bigha odd to the defendant No. 3 for a sum of Rs. 200 by registered sale deeds. The defendant No. 2 subsequently sold a portion of the land purchased by him by a registered sale deed to the defendant No. 5. It was alleged that Chaichoo Singh and some others had wanted to purchase the properties themselves, and so had induced Titai Singh, who did not like the idea that the defendant No. 1 should sell away the properties in his lifetime, to file this false suit.

The learned Munsif found that there was no satisfactory evidence to substantiate the case of fraud. Fraud could only be established by cogent and convincing evidence, but no such evidence was produced. On the contrary, the scribe was examined, and stated that he had read over and explained the deed of gift to Titai Singh, who had instructed him to write it out. An attesting witness and one Ramdeo Singh, who purported to have signed the deed of gift for Titai, who was illiterate, gave evidence to the same effect. In this view he dismissed the suit with costs.

The learned Subordinate Judge conceded that there was no direct evidence of fraud but was of opinion that fraud could be inferred from the circumstances on the record. He enumerated these circumstances as follows :

(1) that Titai Singh was old and illiterate ; (2) that the stamp-vendor was not examined ; (3) that the deed contained a false recital that the defendant No. 1 was Titai's grandson whereas there was actually no evidence at all of any relationship ; (4) that Titai was falsely described as being a resident of Chiraura, defendant No. 1's village, whereas actually he was a resident of village Hulaschak, (5) that the defendant No. 1's name was not mutated in the landlords sarishda; and (6) that the attesting witnesses were all of Chiraura and none of Hulaschak. In this view he held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession and mesne profits, and hence allowed the appeal and decreed the suit with costs.

The points taken in appeal are :

First, that there was no evidence in the case on which a finding of fraudulent misrepresentation could legally be based. Secondly, that, even if executed upon a fraudulent misrepresentation as to the contents, the deed is not void ab initio but merely voidable, and a suit to set it aside must be brought within three years of the date of knowledge ; it being found that the present plaintiff knew from the time of its execution that it was a deed of gift, a suit to set it aside was barred by limitation at the time the present suit was instituted. Thirdly, that there has been no proper trial of the question of the bona fides of the purchase of the other defendants from the defendant No. 1.

I am of opinion that the appeal must succeed upon the first point. I have enumerated the materials from which the lower Appellate Court infers fraud. It is necessary to specify clearly what this inference involves. In this case the fraud alleged is a misrepresentation to Titai that he was executing a lease whereas, in fact the document he was executing was a deed of gift. The fraud, if any, therefore consisted in a direct misrepresentation of fact. Of this there was no direct evidence, no one came forward to prove any misrepresentation, and Titai himself was dead. The only direct evidence in the case was the evidence of the scribe and the attesting witness that the document was read over to Titai and that he executed it knowing it to be a deed of gift. A finding of fraud could, therefore, be based only upon an examination of the circumstances ; and it is obvious that upon none of the circumstances specified could any direct inference of misrepresentation be based. The finding of misrepresentation, if arrived at all, could only be from a consideration of the circumstances as a whole. Some of these circumstances were largely explained away ; for example, the recital that the defendant No. 1 was Titai's grandson, might have referred only to village or courtesy relationship, and as regards the question of residence, Titai in the document was actually described as a resident of Hulaschak, but it was mentioned that at that time he was residing in Chiraura, and it was not disproved that Titai had gone to reside in Chiraura as alleged, though that might have been upon the execution of the deed of gift and not prior to it. That circumstance would largely remove the justification for suspicion in the fact that the attesting witnesses were of Chiraura, not Hulaschak. Again, the fact that Titai was old and illiterate, would justify the inference that he could be defrauded, but not that he was in fact defrauded. As for the fact that defendant No. 1's name was not mutated in the landlord's office, that was largely offset by the fact that canal parchas and chaukidari receipts were filed in his name. These, however, are circumstances which are, strictly speaking, irrelevant in second appeal ; and the only question is whether upon the learned Subordinate Judge's valuation of these circumstances, fraud was an inference which could legally be made. Now, it is well-settled that where fraud is to be inferred from the circumstances, and is not directly proved, those circumstances must be such as to exclude any other reasonable possibility. In other words, the criterion is similar to that which is applicable to circumstantial evidence in criminal cases.

The learned Subordinate Judge has not applied this criterion to the circumstantial evidence. He has not proceeded on any finding of fact that the circumstances enumerated by him exclude every reasonable possibility other than that Titai was induced to execute the document upon a fraudulent misrepresentation with regard to its nature (and indeed he could hardly have done so); but he has proceeded rather upon a wrong legal view of the nature of the circumstantial evidence from which fraud can be inferred.

In these circumstances, the finding is based upon a legal error and can be interfered with in second appeal, the case being of the nature of Ram Gopal v. Shamskhaton (1) where their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that though a Court of second appeal is not competent to question the soundness of a finding of fact by the Court below, and the decision of the lower Court as to the effect of the evidence must stand final as to the fact, yet the soundness of the conclusions derived from the findings of fact may involve a matter of law and may, therefore, be questioned by a Court of second appeal. The legal error of the lower Appellate Court in the present case is with regard to the criterion applicable where fraud is attempted to be proved not by direct but by circumstantial evidence. This criterion as I have said, is that the circumstances must exclude every reasonable possibility except that of fraud. Where there is direct evidence, the matter is otherwise that the finding of fraud may be a pure finding of fact, as has been laid down in Satgur Prasad v. Har Narain Das (2). But where there is no direct evidence and only an inference, then the finding involves the legal question as to whether the circumstances are such that the necessary inference can legally be derived.

In the present case, I am of opinion that it cannot be. There is no evidence in the case upon which a finding of fraud could legally be based.

As the appeal must succeed upon the first ground, the other questions argued do not really need determination. I may state, however, that upon these points I would not be prepared to accept the contentions of the learned Advocate for the appellants. If Titai executed the document under the impression that it was a lease, when in fact it was a deed of gift, then I think there was no real execution since Titai's mind would have been directed to one thing whereas what he put his hand to was something of an altogether different character. The executant's mind was not with his hand. If there was no real execution, the document was wholly void and not merely voidable. That is what was laid down in Sarat Chandra Gupta v. Kanai Lal Chakrabarti (3) the ruling relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge. This ruling appears to me strictly applicable to the case. Therein it was held that where the plaintiff had prayed for a declaration that a deed or gift was void and inoperative since the donor signed it believing, owing to a fraudulent misrepresentation, that it was only a power of attorney, the three years' limitation provided by Arts. 95 and 91 of the Lim. Act had no application, since the principle laid down in Foster v. Mackinnon (4) that the alleged deed was no deed, was applicable, and the deed being void ab initio, did not require to be set aside or cancelled. Richardson, J. in that case observed that the Courts draw a distinction between void and voidable instruments, and held that Art. 91 did not apply to instruments which were void ab initio so as not to require setting aside, as would be the case when the plaintiff raises and establishes the plea known to English lawyer as non est factum.

The learned Advocate for the appellants argued on the basis of Howatson v. Webb (5) that Foster v. Mackinnon (4) was no longer good law. But, in fact, what the later rulings really lay down is that a misrepresentation as to the contents of a document will make it voidable, and only a misrepresentation as to its character will make its execution absolutely void.

And, moreover, this principle seems to have been based to some extent upon the assumption that where a man is able to read the document before executing it but omits to do so, he cannot afterwards in view of his own negligence be heard to say that he was induced to execute the document by a fraudulent misrepresentation. It has, I think, never been laid down that the principle of Foster v. Mackinnon (4) is not still applicable where the person executing the document is blind or illiterate. The law on the subject has been clearly and concisely laid down in Jem Singh v. Bhagwat Singh (6) from which would like to quote the following passage:

"Whether the statement of law in Foster v. Mackinnon (4) would be wholly supported to-day is a matter of some doubt. A distinction has been drawn in the more modern cases between misrepresentation as to the character of a document and misrepresentation as to the contents of a document, and it seems to be the modern view that when there is a misrepresentation as to the contents of a document, but not as to the character of the document, the plea of non est factum is not available to the party deceived unless—and this is very important—he is blind or illiterate. So far as I understand the more modern decision in Houtson v. Webb (5) the rule does not apply to a man who can read but who forbears to read the document".

In the present case the finding is that Pitai was a very old man and illiterate. Hence, in my opinion, if he signed the document upon a misrepresentation as to its contents, there will be no real execution, the plea of non est factum will succeed, and the document will be void ab initio. But, apart from that, it seems to me that a representation that a document was a lease when it was in fact a deed of gift, would be a misrepresentation as to the nature of the document and not merely as to its contents. Obviously, the line of distinction might sometimes be a fine line. I can conceive cases where it might be very difficult to say whether the document signed and the document fraudulently represented actually differed in nature or merely in contents; but I feel no doubt that as between a lease and a deed of gift, there is a difference of nature and not merely a difference of content.

Where the document is wholly void ab initio, any prayer to set it aside is unnecessary and redundant. That is enough to dispose of the questions of limitation and bona fides. The suit could not be barred by limitation, and the defendants Nos. 2 & 5 could acquire no title, however bona fide their purchase from the defendant No. 1 might have been.

As, however, the appellants have succeeded upon the first point, I would allow the appeal and dismiss the suit. Having regard to the circumstances of the case, we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, r. 7—Time for furnishing security beyond that prescribed by O. XLV, r. 7, if can be extended—Privy Council Rules—R. 9.

Under r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules, the High Court has power for cogent reasons to extend the time for furnishing security beyond that which would be allowed by O. XLV, r. 7, if it were real alone. 98 Ind. Cas. 417 (1), Overruled, 101 Ind. Cas. 555 (3) and 177 Ind. Cas. 188 (1), relied on, 143 Ind. Cas. 559 (2), dissented from.

O. Misc. App. arising out of First Appeal No. 154 of 1937.

Mr. Foucar, for the Applicant.

Mr. Clark, for the Respondents.

Roberts, C. J.—This is an application by Ismail Ahmad Piperdi who has been granted a certificate of appeal to His Majesty in Council for further time in which to furnish security for the costs of his appeal. It is conceded that the time given by O. XLV, r. 7, expired six weeks from the date of the granting of the certificate, namely on January 18, on which date the application was filed; but the applicant says that O. LII, r. 66, operate in his favour and that the Court can extend the time in pursuance of the power given to us to make such other order in the premises as the justice of the case requires. Alternatively he says that the Court has such power by virtue of r. 9 of the Order in Council notified in the Gazette of India on April 24, 1920, which is ordered to be observed by all Courts in India and which still applies to Burma by reason of the provisions of s. 84, Govt. of Burma Act, 1935. In J. N. Surty v. T. S.

Chettyar Firm (1) at p. 288 a Bench of this Court considered that by reason of the provisions of O XLV, r. 7, which came into operation of January 1, 1921, the period of six weeks from the date of the grant of the certificate cannot be extended by the exercise of any discretionary power. Neither O LII, r. 66 nor r. 9 of the Privy Council rules was referred to and the correctness of this decision has been doubted by Page, O. J. delivering the judgment of a Bench in an unreported case, Daw Byaw v. Maung Kyaw, Civil Misc. Appl. No. 109 of 1930.

In Bahadur Lal v. Judges of the High Court, Allahabad (2) it was held by a majority that the provisions of r. 9 of the Privy Council rules could not override the provisions of O XLV, r. 7. The latter rule was held to be the expression of a particular intention by the Legislature and as an exception to the general intention contained in r. 9. Niamatullah, J., however, considered that it did not follow that if the security were not furnished, the Court was bound to cancel the certificate but might pass any order ex debito justitiae. It appears that this view has the assent of the Bombay High Court in Nilkanth Balwant Natu v. Shri Satchidanand Vidya Narsinha Bharati (3) and also of the High Court of Madras in Mathukumallu Rammayya v. Vippalapatti Lakshmayya (4) at p. 1017.

It could not be denied that this Court has powers enabling it to make any rules regulating its own procedure, and that such rules may annul, alter or add to any or all of the rules in Sch. I. The provisions of s. 122 of the Code are clear on this point. However it has been ingeniously contended that O. LII, r. 66, the provisions of which are substantially the same as those of r. 9 of the Privy Council rules, does not go so far as to do this and must be read consistently with O. XLV, r. 7, so that the discretion of the Court as regards time is limited. It is also urged that once the certificate has been granted, the Court is functus officio; that it has no more procedure left to regulate as regards the appeal to His Majesty in Council; so that O. LII, r. 66 does not regulate the procedure of this Court at all. Then it is said that the Order in Council from which O. LII, r. 66, derives its source is a mere delegation of powers by the Judicial Committee. In this view, the certificate may be cancelled and orders consequential upon the cancellation may be made, but no more may be done. But the Court is not bound to cancel the certificate. This clearly appears from the terms of r. 9 itself. If it does not do so, the certificate remains in force and some order must be made having regard to the failure to furnish security. It cannot be supposed that the Court was to be left powerless to do anything except to cancel the certificate or in a proper case to refuse to cancel it. If there is a refusal to cancel the certificate, some consequential order may well be necessary. In Mathukumalli Rammayya v. Vuppalapathi Lakshmayya (4). Leach O. J. pointed out that by s. 112 Civil P. O., if there is any conflict between the Code and the Privy Council rules, the latter must prevail. This case appears to me to be a further authority in support of the view that the High Court has power for cogent reasons to extend the time for furnishing security beyond that which would be allowed by O. XLV, r. 7, if it were read alone.

In the present case I think there are cogent reasons for permitting the security which has already been paid into the office of the legal advisers of the applicant to be furnished forthwith. We are told that the applicant is only 19 years of age and he therefore needed advice as to how best to prosecute the appeal he desired to make. He says he was helped by his uncle to make arrangements furnishing the necessary security and it was arranged with one Abdul Aziz (whom he describes as his grandfather but who, it is now stated was his great-uncle) to raise a loan upon security of the deposit of title deeds of the latter's immovable properties. The lender wished to come to Rangoon and deposit the money personally in Court so as to assure himself that the reason given for the advance was genuine. Accordingly he was to visit Rangoon on January 17; there was on the date a disturbed state of affairs in many parts of Burma including Rangoon and the lender failed to arrive. On January 18, applicant filed an affidavit asking for time and on January 20, Abdul Aziz died. The money was deposited with the applicant's Advocates on February 10, and on February 11, he filed a further affidavit setting out the circumstances. In our opinion it is desirable that the security furnished should be paid into Court and that the appeal should proceed forthwith.

Baguley, J.—I agree.

Sharpe, J.—Subject to the question as to whether we have power to extend beyond January 18 last, the time fixed by this Court's order of December 7, 1938, for giving security for costs and making a deposit for printing copies of the records in this appeal to His Majesty in Council, I agree that there are in this case reasons for granting a short extension of time, which reasons may, to my mind, be not improperly described as cogent ones. The question of our power to grant such an extension is not, however, entirely free from difficulty. I desire to base my answer to that question entirely upon r. 9 of the Order in Council dated April 17, 1920. To base my answer to that question on r. 66, O. LII, Civil P. C., which is an Order added to that Code by this High Court under the provisions of s. 122 of that Code, would involve further careful consideration on my part as to whether this High Court had power to make such a rule under that section, for, as at present advised, I feel considerable doubt as to whether this Court had such power. It is, however, unnecessary, in my judgment for me to pursue that line of inquiry, for the material words of r. 9 of the Order in Council are identical with those of r. 66 of O. LII. I therefore confine myself to a consideration of r. 9 of the Order in Council. The question which we have to decide is precisely the same as that which was before a Full Bench of the Madras High Court last year. In the case of Mathukumalli Rammayya v. Vuppalapatti Lakshmayya (4), the Madras High Court has not, seemingly, added to the Code of Civil Procedure any rules corresponding to our O. LII. In that Madras case Leach, J. J said, at p. 1017*:

"The question is reduced to this: Does r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules give a discretion to the Court to extend the time?"

I myself at one time thought that the proper construction of r. 9 of the Order in Council required that the words "make such further or other order in the premises as, in the opinion of the Court the justice of the case requires," should be read with the words "may give such directions as to the costs of the appeal, and the security entered into by the appellant as the Court shall think fit," a construction which was urged before, but ultimately rejected by the Madras High Court. Despite the not inconsiderable body of judicial opinion which has accepted the above construction, I have come to the conclusion that the view which I at first took is not the correct one. To my mind the word "may," when it first appears in r. 9, between the word "Court" and the words "on its own motion," is the key to the construction of the whole rule; had there been the word "shall" there instead of "may," I think that there would be considerable difficulty in not giving r. 9 the construction which was rejected by the Madras High Court and urged before us by Mr. Clark. But, as it is "may" and not "shall," the decision of the Madras High Court was, if I may respectfully say so, a correct one, and we must now give a similar decision. As my Lord the Chief Justice has pointed out in his judgment, this view has had the assent of the Bombay High Court for about 12 years, and, as he pointed out during the course of the argument before us, it is more likely than not that, were that an erroneous view to take, there would by now be a reported decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council expressing disapproval of the view taken by the Bombay High Court. For these reasons, I agree that we should in the present case extend, in the way suggested by my Lord the Chief Justice, the time already fixed for giving security and making the necessary deposit in connection with the appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 4 (2)—Assessee receiving interest on Government Bonds in England—This sum expended in England in purchasing machinery for use of assessee's business and sent to India—Whether income received or brought into British India.

What the Income Tax Act charges with tax is income and nothing but income, whether that income accrues or arises or is received in British India or is deemed so to arise or accrue or be received by reason of being brought into British India. But it

income arising or accruing without British India is spent or otherwise so dealt with that it ceases to be income instead of being brought into British India, it is not chargeable under the Act merely because the thing upon which it has been expended or into which it has been turned, is subsequently brought there. [p. 822, col. 2]

Assesseees were the owners of certain sterling bonds of the Govt. of India, the interest on which was payable in England. The assesseees received such interest in England and this sum was expended by their agent in the purchase in England on behalf of the assesseees of certain mill stores and machinery which were then sent to the assesseees in British India and there used by them for the purposes of their own mills. The Income-tax officer included this amount in the income of the assesseees as being income brought into British India:

Held, that the things brought into India could, in no sense, be described as income brought into British India within meaning of s. 4 (2) and as only income could be taxed under the Act, the sum so received and expended could not be taxed.

Messrs. J. Millard Tucker, K. C. and H. Hull, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. P. Hills, for the Respondents.

Lord Romer.—The respondents, who carry on the business of cotton spinners and weavers in British India, are the owners of certain sterling bonds of the Govt. of India, the interest on which is payable in England.

In the year ending March 31, 1936, interest on such bonds was paid in sterling in England to certain agents of the respondents, the amount of such interest expressed in rupees being Rs. 18,333. This sum was expended by such agents in the purchase in England on behalf of the respondents of certain mill stores and machinery which were then sent to the respondents in British India and there used by them for the purposes of their business.

In these circumstances the Income-tax Officer in assessing the respondents to income-tax for the year of assessment 1936-37 included in their income for the year 1935-36 the sum of Rs. 18,333 as being income "brought into British India" within the meaning of s. 4 (2) of Indian Income Tax Act, 1922.

It will be convenient at this stage to set out s. 3 of the Act and the material portions of s. 4 as these sections stood in the year of assessment.

"Section 3.—Where any Act of the Indian Legislature enacts that income-tax shall be charged for any year at any rate or rates applicable to the total income of an assessee, tax at the rate or those rates shall be charged for that year in accordance with, and subject to the provisions of this Act in respect of all income profits and gains of the previous year of every individual Hindu undivided family, company, firm and other association of individuals."

Section 4 (1).—Save as hereinafter provided, this Act shall apply to all income, profits, or gains, as described or comprised in s. 6, from whatever source derived, accruing or arising, or received in British India or deemed under the provisions of this Act to accrue, or arise, or to be received in British India.

(3) Income, profits and gains accruing or arising without British India to a person resident in British India shall, if they are received in or brought into British India, be deemed to have accrued or arisen in British India and to be income, profits and gains of the year in which they are so received or brought notwithstanding the fact that they did not so accrue or arise in that year."

The respondents in due course appealed to the Assistant Commissioner against the assessment in respect of the Rs. 18,333, but he dismissed the appeal and confirmed the assessment.

The respondents then applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, to refer a question of law with respect to their liability to be assessed to income-tax in respect of the amount in question to the High Court under s. 66 (2) of the Act. The Commissioner accordingly made a reference of the following question:—

"Whether in the circumstances of the case the Income-tax Officer has rightly included in the income liable to tax, the amount of Rs. 18,333 on account of interest on sterling securities on the ground that though the said income accrued or arose in England, it was received or brought into British India within the meaning of s. 4 (2) of the Act."

In making the reference the Commissioner, as required by the Act, expressed his own opinion upon the question referred. His opinion was that the answer to the question should be in the affirmative.

The reference* in due course came before the High Court before Beaumont, C. J. and Blackwell, J. and on September 27, 1937, the Court gave judgment answering this question that had been referred to them in the negative.

In so doing the High Court was, in their Lordships' opinion, plainly right. What the Act charges with tax is income and nothing but income, whether that income accrues or arises or is received in British India or is deemed so to arise or accrue or be received by reason of being brought into British India. But if income arising or accruing without British India is spent or otherwise so dealt with that it ceases to be income instead of being brought into British India, it is not, in their Lordships' judgment, chargeable under the Act merely because the thing upon which it has been expended or into which it has been turned is subsequently brought there. It is not necessary, of course, in order to attract tax that income received abroad should be brought into India in the exact form in which it has been received. As was said by Beaumont, C. J. in his judgment in the present case:

"Foreign income may be received in sterling or francs or dollars and may be brought into India in the form of rupees or income received abroad may be remitted to India by means of a banker's draft. To use Lord Brampton's phrase in Gresham Life Assurance Society, Ltd. v. Bishop (1), the income may be received 'in specie or in any form known to the commercial world for the transmission of money from one country or place to another.'"

Much to the same effect was said by Lord Lindley in the same case.

"A sum of money" [he said] "may be received in more ways than one, e. g., by the transfer of a coin or a negotiable instrument or other document which represents and produces coin, and is treated as such by business men. Even a settlement in account may be equivalent to a receipt of a sum of money although no money may pass."

Other examples can readily be imagined. Beaumont, C. J. indeed suggested the case of an assessee, who was desirous of bringing into British India foreign income for use there as income, purchasing bonds with the foreign income, bringing the bonds to India, and then selling them and applying the proceeds as income. It is possible that such a case might occur, although it would give rise to the question among others whether the sum to be brought into tax in India should be the sum expended on the bonds in the foreign country or the proceeds of the bonds received in India. That question can be dealt with when it arises. It does not arise here. It is not and cannot be suggested in the present case that the mill stores and machinery were purchased in England and shipped out to India as a method of bringing over the sterling interest that had been received in this country. No one in his senses would think of employing such a method of transmitting money. But apart from the inherent improbability of the thing, it is found as a fact by the Commissioner that the mill stores and machinery were required by the respondents for their business in India and it is not suggested that they will be sold or will be employed otherwise than in and for the purposes of the respondents' mills.

It is, however, contended on the part of the appellant that the use to which the stores and machinery are put in India is immaterial. They were bought, says the appellant, with the sterling equivalent of Rs. 18,333 and whatever their value, whatever the intention with which they were bought, whatever the purpose to which they are now being put, their arrival in India resulted in Rs. 18,333 foreign income being brought into British India.

Their Lordships are not prepared to accept so extravagant a contention. To show how extravagant it is, many illustrations might be given. It will be sufficient to take one suggested by Mr. Hills in the course of his argument before their Lordships. A resident in British India when on a visit to this country receives here the sum of £500 sterling as interest on British Govt Stock. He expends it here in replenishing his wardrobe and in purchasing a motor car. At the end of two years he returns to British India taking with him the garments and the motor car. The garments have been worn for two years and the car in that time may have been driven 40,000 miles or more. Yet if the appellant is right, the person in question will, on his return to India, be deemed to have brought back with him the £500 interest that he received in this country. The truth of the matter is that in such a case he does not bring back into India a penny of the £500. He has spent it all in England. If upon his return to India the question were put to him, "How much have you left of the £500?" his answer would be "none," and the answer would be a true one whether addressed to a casual enquirer or to the Income-tax Officer. What he has taken back to India are some much worn clothes and a car much depreciated in value. But these things can in no sense be described as income; and it is only income that can be taxed under the Indian Income Tax Act.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion and will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The respondents' costs of the appeal must be paid by the appellant.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 112—Notice under s. 107, if must relate to breach of peace or wrongful act in contemplation at time when information is given to Magistrate.

Action taken under s. 112, Criminal P. O., constitutes a judicial act and therefore the Magistrate should not act arbitrarily. There must be information of a nature which convinces him that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. It is impossible to formulate a hard and fast rule with regard to the nature of the information on which a Magistrate should act. What is reasonably sufficient to satisfy a Magistrate must depend on the particular situation. While that there must be something more than the past misconduct of the person proceeded against to justify a notice being served upon him, the Code does not require the information to show the particular act which is in contemplation at the time. The Magistrate must be satisfied that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. What will satisfy him must depend on the particular facts of the case. 47 Ind. Cas. 72 (8), relied on. [p. 826, col. 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

The High Court has undoubtedly power to quash proceedings where the notice issued does not comply with the requirements of s. 112, but before doing so, it must be satisfied that there has been a failure to comply. It must be remembered that the issue of the notice is merely a preliminary step and no order can be passed under s. 107 unless the inquiry which follows the issue of the notice shows that the laying of the information was justified. The High Court can always interfere when the inquiry has not been held in accordance with the law or a wrong conclusion has been arrived at. [p. 827, col. 2.]

Cr. R. Cases and Ps. to revise an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Pollachi, dated February 22, 1939.

Order of Reference to a Full Bench

Patanjali Sastri, J. — These criminal revision cases raise an important question as to the construction and scope of s. 107, Criminal P. O. On the one hand, it is argued for the petitioners that the information and the evidence on which a Magistrate can act under this section must relate to a breach of the peace or wrongful act in contemplation at the time when such information is given to the Magistrate, and that any wider construction of the provision might have the effect of turning the section into a weapon of oppression in the hands of the magistracy. On the other hand, it is contended by the learned Public Prosecutor that such a restriction of the scope of the section would impair its practical usefulness as a provision authorizing preventive or precautionary proceedings being instituted against persons who, in the opinion of the local Magistrates, are likely to disturb public tranquillity, and it is therefore urged that a wider construction should be placed upon it. The language of the provision is by no means free from ambiguity and there is considerable divergence of judicial opinion on the point: see, for example, High Court Proceedings No. 1952, dated August 29, 1916 (1), Maruthapali Goundar v. Empevor (2) and Raja Run Bahadur Singh v. Rani Tileasuree Koer (3), relied upon for the petitioners; and Kumarappa Chettiar v. Emperor (4) and the decision of Lakshmana Rao, J. in Criminal Revision Case No. 105 of 1939 (not yet reported), relied upon by the Public Prosecutor. Having regard to the general importance of the question raised and the conflict of decisions referred to above, I think it is desirable that there should be an authoritative ruling on the point by a Division Bench or Full Bench and I therefore direct this case to be placed before my Lord the Chief Justice for necessary orders as to posting.

Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, N. Shanker Bhat, G. Gopalaswami, S. R. Subramaniam and N. Somasundaram, for the Petitioners.

Order of the Full Bench

Leach, C. J. — In the village of Negamam in the Coimbatore District, there are two factions and there is strong enmity between them. Their enmity dates back to the Legislative Assembly elections held in 1934, if not earlier. At the present time the factions are opposing one another with regard to the management of an institution known as the Lakshmi Vilas and Dravyasagaya Nidhi, Ltd., and the management of a temple known as the Kannikaparameswari temple. On September 23, 1938, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Pollachi served notice on twelve persons under s. 112, Criminal P. O., calling upon them to show cause why they should not be ordered to execute security bonds under s. 107. According to an affidavit of the petitioner in Cr. R. O. No. 245 of 1939 filed in the present proceedings, rioting had taken place on that day. The accusations against these twelve persons, who have been referred to as the counter-petitioners, are set out in para. 3 of the petitioner's affidavit which reads as follows :

"The counter-petitioners Nos. 1 to 12 noted in col. 4 who are residents within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Pollachi, and who are members, partisans and hirelings of a faction of which Pillaya Chetty of Nagamam is the leader, have been systematically committing acts of rowdyism, assault, trespass and intimidation on members of the opposite party, and on September 23, 1938, all of them were found armed with weapons for a similar purpose endangering public peace. The feelings between the parties are very much strained and they are likely to come to a clash at any moment resulting in a breach of peace disturbing the public tranquillity seriously. Hence it is requested that the counter-petitioners may be ordered to execute a bond with sureties for keeping peace for a period of one year. Pending termination of the proceedings, all the counter-petitioners may be ordered to execute interim bonds as breach of peace is likely to occur at any time."

The Magistrate considered that the information was of such a nature that he was justified in ordering the counter-petitioners to execute interim security bonds. These bonds were executed on October 14, 1938. On February 5, 1939, the Police laid information against the petitioner, and it is obvious from the notice which was subsequently served upon him under s. 112, that the information was to the effect that he was also a leader of the faction of which the counter-petitioners were said to be members and was giving them active support. At the same time information was laid against Pillaya Chetti, the person previously referred to as the leader of the faction, and one Mylsami Goundan. The Magistrate was satisfied that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace occurring and issued notice under s. 112, against the petitioner and the two other persons. In this notice they were referred to as counter-petitioners Nos. 13, 14 and 15, respectively. The petitioner says that the notice served upon him does not comply with the requirements of the section and that the proceedings which have been instituted against him have been unlawfully instituted. The notice reads as follows :

"Whereas it has been made to appear to me by credible information that there are two factions in the village of Nagamam led by Annal Chetti on the one side and Muthuswami Chetti (petitioner) and Pillaya Chetti on the other side.

That there is misunderstanding between Annal Chetti and counter-petitioners Nos. 13 and 14 (Muthuswami Chetti and Pillaya Chetti) regarding the management of Lakshmi Vilas and Dravyasagaya Nidhi, Ltd. and owing to the Delhi Assembly Elections in 1934 and also in respect of the management of the Kannikaparameswari temple ;

That there is dispute and civil litigation between the two factions regarding possession of the temple lands, that consequently, the feelings between the two parties have become strained and that there is likelihood of the breach of the peace in the village, that counter-petitioners Nos. 13 to 15 (petitioners herein and the counter petitioners Nos 14 and 15) are giving active support to counter-petitioners Nos. 1 to 12 to further their nefarious activities in the village ;

That counter-petitioner No. 15 trespassed into the house of Kamatchi Chetti on September 23, 1938, and created trouble ;

That counter-petitioners Nos. 1 to 12 who were responsible for the disturbance in the village on September 23, 1938, had come there at the instance of counter-petitioner No. 15 to help counter-petitioner No. 14 and his son and to retaliate the attempted attack on them on September 21, 1938 ;

That you are likely to commit a serious breach of the peace and disturb the public tranquillity at the village of Nagamam ;

You are hereby required under s. 107 (1), Criminal P. O., to appear before this Court at 11 A. M. on March 8, 1939, at Pollachi and to show cause why you should not be ordered to execute bonds for Rs. 1,000 each with two sureties each in a like sum to keep the peace for one year."

As pointed out by our learned brother Patanjali Sastri, J. in the Referring Order, the petitioner's case is that a notice under s. 107, Criminal P. O., must relate to a breach of the peace or wrongful act in contemplation at the time when the information is given to the Magistrate, and that a notice which does not go to this length is necessarily void. The Public Prosecutor challenges this contention and says that if the section were so interpreted, it would impair its practical usefulness. Section 107 (1) states :

"Whenever a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-Divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the First Class is informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity, the Magistrate if, in his opinion, there is sufficient ground for proceeding, may, in manner hereinafter provided, require such person to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond, with or without surety for keeping the peace for such period not exceeding one year as the Magistrate thinks fit to fix."

The requirements of this sub section are therefore: (i) there must be information that a person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity or do a wrongful act which may probably cause a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity, (ii) the Magistrate, if he is of the opinion that there is sufficient ground for requiring the person against whom the information is laid to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a security bond for keeping the peace, should issue notice to him; (iii) and in calling upon the person to show cause, the Magistrate must proceed "in manner hereinafter provided" which means that he must issue a notice in accordance with the requirements of s. 112. That section says that when a Magistrate deems it necessary to require a person to show cause he shall make an order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force, and the number, character, and class of sureties (if any) required. As will be shown presently, s. 112 has on occasions been misread and further particulars than those required by the section have been insisted upon. All that the section requires is that the substance of the information shall be set forth and if this is done and the other requirements of the section are complied with, the notice is a valid one.

Section 117 provides the procedure to be followed when a notice has been issued under s. 112. When an order under s. 112 has been read or explained under s. 113 to a person present in Court or when a person appears or is brought before a Magistrate in compliance with, or in execution of a summons or warrant issued under s. 114, the Magistrate shall proceed to inquire into the truth of the information upon which action has been taken and to take such further evidence as may appear necessary. The enquiry shall be made as nearly as may be practicable where the order requires security for keeping the peace, in the manner prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in summons cases. Therefore before a person on whom a notice has been served under s. 112 can be required to enter into a security bond under s. 107, the matter must be fully investigated by the Magistrate.

The cases on which the petitioner relies in support of his contention that the notice must set forth the particular breach of the peace or wrongful act in contemplation are High Court Proceedings No. 1952, dated August 29, 1876 (1) and the decisions in Nagireddi Konda Reddi v. Emperor (5), Maruthapali Goundar v. Emperor (2), Santhanaramaswami v. Emperor (6) and Kalia

Goundan v. Emperor (7). In High Court Proceedings No. 1952 dated August 29, 1876 (1) complaints were made against 21 persons that they were constantly creating disturbances in bazaars and they were called upon to show cause why they should not be bound over to keep the peace. The Court expressed the opinion that the act of which information is given and in respect of which security is required, must be an act which is shown to be in contemplation at the time the information is given and not merely one a repetition of which may be apprehended from past misconduct of the kind without anything further. This case was under the old Code, but the language of ss. 107 and 112 was materially the same. While we agree that there must be something more than the past misconduct of the person proceeded against to justify a notice being served upon him, we are unable to agree that the Code requires the information to show the particular act which is in contemplation at the time. The Magistrate must be satisfied that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. What will satisfy him must depend on the particular facts of the case. In Nagireddi Konda Reddi v. Emperor (5) Abdur-Rahim and Napier, JJ. considered that proceedings under s. 107, Criminal P. O., should be quashed if the notice issued did not give particulars of the persons threatened and when the apprehension of a breach of the peace arose. There the notice stated that :

"seven persons headed by Nagi Reddi Konda Reddi, accused No. 1, a rich and influential resident of Kaluvoy, and others are addicted to crimes of violence involving a breach of the peace and threatened injury to the lives and property of several persons and there is an imminent danger of a breach of the peace."

The decision in a particular case must depend on the facts of the case and we are unable to agree that the absence of such particulars, as these, would necessarily vitiate the notice. In the first instance, the particulars may not have been given to the Magistrate, but nevertheless he may have been convinced that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace, in which case it was his duty to issue the notice. The passing of an order requiring security will, of course, depend on the nature of the evidence given at the subsequent inquiry. In Maruthapali Goundar v. Emperor (2) Pandrang Row, J.

(7) 59 M. L. J. 887; 127 Ind. Cas. 652; A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 859; (1930) Or. Cas. 1035; (1930) M. W. N. 698; 32 L. W. 320; Ind. R. L. (1930) Mad. 1036; 32 Or. L. J. 27.

accepted the proposition that it was necessary to state in the notice the likelihood of the commission in the near future of a particular breach of the peace or a wrongful act likely to lead to a breach of the peace. In Santhanaramaswami v. Emperor (6) King, J. considered that the notice in that case was wrong because neither time, nor place, nor any indication of the identity of the persons alleged to have been threatened had been given, but here the learned Judge was insisting upon something which the section does not insist upon. In Kumarappa Chettiar v. Emperor (4) King, J. rightly observed that in order to justify an order under s. 107, it must be proved that the persons concerned are likely to break the peace. In Kalia Goundan v. Emperor (7) Krishna Pandalai, J. considered that s. 112 requires the Magistrate to give an "abstract of the facts" upon which he charges the persons proceeded against with being likely to commit a breach of the peace. If by an abstract is meant something more than the substance of information we do not agree. The learned Judge did not regard the notice in that case as being sufficient but this opinion is certainly to be doubted. It is, however, not necessary for the purposes of this case to discuss the facts of that case as the judgment does not appear to go beyond the other judgments to which reference has been made.

There is no doubt that action taken under s. 112 constitutes a judicial act and therefore the Magistrate should not act arbitrarily. There must be information of a nature which convinces him that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. It is impossible to formulate a hard and fast rule with regard to the nature of the information on which a Magistrate should act. What is reasonably sufficient to satisfy a Magistrate must depend on the particular situation. The person who gives the information may not be in a position to give details, but the source of the information may be sufficient to convince the Magistrate that breach of the peace is likely, and if he is convinced the law requires him to take action. We consider that Knox, J. aptly stated the position in Jaguji Rai v. Emperor (8), when he said:

"As I read this section, there may be cases in which a Magistrate of the first class is merely informed that a person is likely to disturb the public tranquillity without any information being given as to his intent to do wrongful acts. The Magistrate is responsible for the peace of the district. He acts upon this information and he is required to set forth in writing the substance of the information received. In this case we are not told that the Magistrate has received any information of definite acts intended. Apparently from the information he received, he was satisfied that the persons concerning whom the information had been given were likely to commit some act which might occasion a breach of the peace. The reason given for this probability was that they were on terms of enmity with each other. Where the Magistrate can go into further particulars, he should certainly go into them. But it may well be that all the information he receives is that there will be a breach of the public peace, and if he considers that information to come from a reliable source, he has jurisdiction to make the order required by s. 112."

The High Court has undoubtedly power to quash proceedings where the notice issued does not comply with the requirements of s. 112, but before doing so, it must be satisfied that there has been a failure to comply. It must be remembered that the issue of the notice is merely a preliminary step and no order can be passed under s. 107 unless the inquiry which follows the issue of the notice shows that the laying of the information was justified. The High Court can always interfere when the inquiry has not been held in accordance with the law or a wrong conclusion has been arrived at. Far too much stress has been laid in the past on the wording of the notice and too little regard paid to the safeguards provided by the subsequent procedure. In the course of the arguments advanced on behalf of the petitioner, several cases have been quoted which relate to action taken under s. 110. There are conflicting decisions on the question of what the notice in such a case should contain. It is, however, not necessary for us to discuss the cases relating to s. 110. Section 107 is a self-contained section and the Court is not required for the purposes of this petition to travel beyond the cases which have reference to that section.

Now, applying the provisions of s. 112 to the notice issued in this case, what is the position? The notice states that the petitioner, is a leader of one of the rival factions in the village, that the feelings between the factions have become strained, that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace in the village and that the petitioner is giving active support to the members of his faction to further their nefarious activities in the village. The nefarious activities referred to are known to the petitioner who has set them out in the affidavit which he has sworn and filed in support of his petition asking for the quashing of the proceedings. It is impossible in these circumstances to say with reason that the substance of the information received by the Magistrate has not been set out and it is also impossible to say with reason that there is no case shown for inquiry under s. 107. We regard this notice as complying with the requirements of the section, and therefore there is no foundation for the application to this Court to exercise its revisional powers. It follows that the petition must be dismissed and the Magistrate will proceed with the inquiry in accordance with law.

Custom (Punjab)—Person dying leaving grandson with step-mother—Share of step-mother—True heir—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Remand—Necessary issues not tried—Case can be remitted for trial of these issues.

Where a person dies leaving behind him a grandson with his step mother, the true heir is the grandson but a half is frequently given under Customary Law to a step-mother for her maintenance and the maintenance of her daughters. She has only a life-tenure in half share thus given to her.

Where the necessary issues in the case have not been tried, the Appellate Court can under the provisions of s. 151, Civil P. O., remit the suit to the trial Court for a re-trial upon those issues.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated December 1, 1938.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jiwan Lal Kapur, for the Respondents (Plaintiffs).

Addison, J.—The following pedigree-table is necessary in order to understand the facts of this case:

SUBA SINGH
Achhar Singh = Mst. Dharmon
(defendant No. 1)
Bhagat Singh = Mst. Sant
Kaur
(defendant No. 2)
Mst. Bhagwan Devi		Mst. Askaur
alias Ohint Kaur		(defendant
(defendant		Kaur
No. 5.)		No. 4.)
		Mst. Sant (defendant
		No. 3.)

The property in suit comprises houses and agricultural land which originally belonged to Suba Singh. His son Achhar Singh, husband of Mst. Dharmon, defendant No. 1, died in his lifetime. When Suba Singh died in 1912, his land was mutated in the names of his grandson Bhagat Singh and his step-mother, Mst. Dharmon, in equal shares. The true heir remained of course Bhagat Singh but a half is frequently given under customary law to a step-mother for her maintenance and the maintenance of her daughters. Mst. Dharmon had in fact two daughters, Mst. Sant Kaur and Mst. Askaur, defendants Nos. 3 and 4. The half share which went to Mst. Dharmon would, of course, only be on the usual life tenure. When Bhagat Singh died, his half share was mutated in the name of his widow, another Mst. Sant Kaur, defendant No. 2. She has a married daughter, Mst. Bhagwan Devi, defendant No. 5. On April 20, 1936, Mst. Dharmon and Mst. Sant Kaur, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, gifted by two registered deeds the whole estate in equal shares to their daughters, Mst. Sant Kaur, Mst. Askaur and Mst. Bhagwan Devi, defendants Nos. 3 to 5. The plaintiffs, who claim to be collaterals of Bhagat Singh in the sixth degree, thereupon instituted the present suit for a declaration that these gifts would not affect their reversionary rights after the death of the two ladies, defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The trial Court decreed the claim with respect to the half share of Mst. Sant Kaur but dismissed the suit with respect to the half share of Mst. Dharmon on the ground that she took the property absolutely and had acquired title by adverse possession and had therefore the power to gift her half share. The learned District Judge on appeal decreed the claim in full on the ground that Mst. Dharmon held only a life estate in the half share which was mutated in her favour. Against this decision the defendants have preferred this second appeal.

There is no doubt that Mst. Dharmon had only a life-tenure but this is far from disposing of the case. According to the answer to question 45 of the Riwaj-i-am of Hoshiarpur District prepared in 1914, the Sainis of this District stated that a daughter succeeded in the absence of descendants of a great grandfather. That means that only collaterals up to the fourth degree can displace a daughter. The plaintiffs, therefore, according to this answer have no locus standi to sue as they are not heirs in the presence of the married daughter of Bhagat

Singh, namely Mst. Bhagwan Devi, defendant No. 5. There has, however, been no trial of this question and the learned Counsel appearing for the plaintiffs stated that there should be a remand so that he might be enabled to disprove the answer to question 45 given by the Sainis.

As regards sisters, in which category Mst. Sant Kaur and Mst. Askaur, defendants Nos. 3 and 4 would come, the answer to question 54 is that Sainis stated that sisters succeeded in the absence of all collaterals. This would mean that the plaintiffs would, according to the Customary Law, be nearer heirs than Mst. Sant Kaur and Mst. Askaur, though this matter is not important in the presence of the married daughter, Mst. Bhagwan Devi. As the necessary issues in the case have not been tried, we accept this appeal, set aside the orders of the Courts below and under the provisions of s. 151, Civil P. O., remit the suit to the trial Court for re-trial upon the following issues : 1. Is the suit property ancestral or self-acquired and does this make any difference? 2. Are the plaintiffs, who are collaterals in the sixth degree, the heirs of Bhagat Singh and not Mst. Bhagwan Devi, his daughter? 3. Are the sisters, Mst. Sant Kaur and Mst. Askaur, preferential heirs instead of the collaterals in the sixth degree? Even if it be held that the sisters are not to be preferred to the collaterals, this would be unimportant so far as the collaterals are concerned, if Mst. Bhagwan Devi is held to be a preferential heir to the collaterals, which would prima facie appear to be the case, according to the answer to question 45. With these remarks, we send the case back for re-trial but allow the defendants-appellants their costs in this Court and in the Court of the District Judge; costs in the trial Court will be in the discretion of that Court at the time when the suit is re-decided by it.

TADUTURU POLIGADU—PRISONER

—ACCUSED

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 27—Confessional statement must be voluntary — Criminal trial—Murder—Presumption—Accused's recent possession of property of murdered person—Cause of death not proved—Presumption of guilt, if arises.

The general rule that a confession should be voluntary should apply to a confessional statement under s. 27.

Where a person had been persistently questioned for hours, throughout being under arrest, this process is such as to taint any result which may arise from it. It is a clear breach of the Police instructions which are not to pester people who are under arrest. The statement thus extracted cannot be considered as voluntary confession and is not receivable in evidence. [p. 831, col. 2.]

Where the charge is specific, that the murder was caused by throttling and it is not proved and there is no evidence to show that the deceased was murdered at all, the presumption of guilt cannot be drawn from the recent possession by the accused of jewellery taken from the murdered person. 143 Ind. Cas. 46 (1 distinguished).

Refd. T. and Cr. A. referred by the Sessions Judge, Vizagapatam, dated April 5, 1939.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. R. Sadasivam Pillai, for the Accused.

Mockett, J.—The appellant has been convicted and sentenced to death for the murder of one Allu Akkamma by throttling her on December 4, 1938, and it is well to remember that the charge is specific, that the murder was caused by throttling. On the morning of December 4, the deceased was proceeding from Goladi, a village which will be found on the south of the plan, Ex. M, towards a village called Yedlavalasa, which is not marked on the plan, but which it is conceded is beyond Mettavalasa which is to the north of the plan. The learned Judge has summarized the facts in this case very fully and we may say at the outset that we are largely in agreement with him with regard to his findings of fact. The deceased set out on that morning according to P. W. No. 5, her brother-in-law; at about 8 A. M. and she was seen about one furlong from Goladi village walking in front of a man who, P. W. No. 16 was almost but not quite certain, was the accused. She was wearing a black sari similar to M. O. No. 2, for that is no doubt what P. W. No. 16 means when he says that she was wearing M. O. No. 2. Her later history is spoken to by P. Ws. Nos. 17 and 18. P. W. No. 17 says that at about 9 o'clock he saw her near the uplands between two hillocks. He says he was going to Goladi with change to pay coolies. He also saw the accused. He was 100 yards in front of the deceased when he saw him. If that is so, between the place where P. W. No. 16 saw the accused and the hillocks, the accused had overtaken the deceased. P. W. No. 18 who also was in the neighbourhood of the hillocks says that he saw the accused going towards Mettavalasa and behind him a woman with a black sari similar to M. O. No. 2. He says he saw P. W. No. 17 going towards Goladi. We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the evidence is more than sufficient to show that on that morning the deceased left her house and proceeded along the road, and we think, too, that the accused was sufficiently identified as walking at one time behind and at a later stage in front of her. That was the last heard of the deceased. She did not return to her village and there seems to be little doubt that the next seen of her was by P. W. No. 4, a little boy, who on Tuesday, December 6, went to the neighbourhood of P. W. No. 3's field, which is adjacent to the road, to cut grass. He said he saw a person lying down with a black sari covered over the face in the cholam field of P. W. No. 3. He went away because he thought it was P. W. No. 3 watching for persons who had gone to cut grass without his permission. P. W. No. 3 on Thursday next went to the field and there discovered the body, or rather half the body, of the deceased. She has been satisfactorily identified and no argument was seriously put before us that that was not her body. But by that time the body was in two pieces, one-half of which was found a considerable distance to the west of the point where the upper half was found, which was at the point E, on the plan near P. W. No. 3's field.

It is naturally important to ascertain the cause of death in a case of murder. P. W. No. 2, the Assistant Surgeon of Bobbili Local Fund Hospital, has given evidence about it. He has described the state of this body, which it must be remembered was in two pieces, and he quite definitely says: "I cannot give the cause of death owing to the fragmentary nature of the corpse and the advanced nature of decomposition." The tongue was protruding apparently. He says that this might have been due to strangling, but it might equally well have been due to decomposition. He does, however, make one interesting statement, namely that there was a stab on this woman, three-fourth of an inch long, on the left side of the chest between the sixth and seventh ribs. He was unable to trace it further owing to the fact that the lung underneath it had decomposed. He says that might have been caused by the tusk of a wild boar. In this connection it is evident there are wild boars in the neighbourhood, because after seeing what was supposed to be P. W. No. 3 concealed under a black sari, P. W. No. 4 actually joined a hunting party who were after wild pigs. So we are in this position, that it is not possible to say on the evidence before us how this woman met her death.

The Police were obviously at a loss. They seem to have suspected a lot of people although they were not willing to admit it. P. W. No. 6 says that at first P. W. No. 5, the brother-in-law of the deceased, was suspected and was arrested as also were three other persons, but this is denied by P. W. No. 20, the Sub-Inspector, who says that he never arrested any other person. He did, he admits, suspect P. W. No. 5 and some gamblers of Mettavalasa. But in this connection it is right to say that apparently in this district the Police take a rather strange view as to what constitutes an arrest. For reasons which naturally are not known, being no doubt part of Police investigation, the accused was later arrested, he was arrested by P. W. No. 20, and we use that expression advisedly because what happened was he was taken from Goladi village where he was repeatedly questioned by P. W. No. 20 in custody to Mettavalasa at 11 or 12 noon. From then or from an earlier stage, because there is a variation in the evidence as to the exact time when he was taken there, it is evident that this man was subjected to persistent questioning by the Circle Inspector. P. W. No. 9 states that the Circle Inspector questioned him from 9 or 10 in the morning till 1 or 2 in the afternoon. At first the accused denied everything, but after persistent questioning he gave the statement in Ex. J at 1 or 2 p. m. Then says P. W. No. 9 the accused was arrested after he had given the statement in Ex. J. That was not the only thing that happened. The Circle Inspector seems to have thought it well to make a production of P. Ws. Nos. 17 and 18 before the accused and examined them for the second time in his presence. P. W. No. 10 also states—and he is the President of the Panchayat Court and the Co-operative Union—"The Sub-Inspector of Police or the Circle Inspector of Police arrested him formally at 12-30 P. M. or so." Now in our opinion there is not the slightest doubt that this man was taken in charge by the Police at Goladi village, questioned there and taken to Mettavalasa and there closely questioned for a period of some hours. This seems to us, apart from any other aspect of the case, to be entirely contrary to the orders issued to the Madras Police relating to investigation of offences. Para. 303 is most explicit that while questions to persons who might give useful information are proper, when once an accused person has been arrested, the Police are strictly forbidden to interrogate him or press him to make any statement, and we consider that it is tantamount to reducing this paragraph to a farce for the Police to take a man, hold him for a long period, subject him to incessant question, press him to confess, as we think happened, and then after they had extracted what they wanted, go through the solemn process of formally arresting him. The importance of this is that under this process the accused made a statement which is recorded in Ex. J. It is as follows:

"Last Sunday Allu Akkamma, a Golla woman of Goladi village, was coming 20 yards behind me. I threw her down and throttled her and she died. Then I removed her two gold nose rings, two gold ear rings and four gold top ear rings. On the next day while it was still dark I secreted them (the ornaments) after tying them up in small rags, in the row of pots in a corner of my sister Poli's house in Mugada. I will pick out and give the ornaments if you come with me."

That was attested by the Village Munsif, P. W. No. 9, P. W. No. 10 and the Circle Inspector P. W. No. 21, in addition to two other persons who were examined. It will be observed that the statement, namely about the woman coming behind him, bears considerable resemblance to the evidence of some of the prosecution witnesses and in this case the accused has suggested that this crime has been laid at his door in order to remove the suspicion from the other Gollas including P. W. No. 5. On receipt of this statement the Police and certain of the witnesses including P. Ws. Nos. 9 and 10 proceeded to the house of P. W. No. 11 who is the sister of the accused. She seems to have been a curious person to choose as a depository for stolen goods because according to her cross-examination she was not friendly with the accused and he had not visited her for a long time. But the Police party went there and according to them, they recovered a bundle which contained M. O's Nos. 3, 4 and 5. Their procedure also seems to have been strange. It appears from the evidence of P. W. No. 12 that on their arrival they sat down outside P. W. No. 11's house for a period of an hour or 1½ hours, presumably until it was dark. According to the Police Officers they recovered these material objects from a pot. P. W. No. 11 is quite clear that she never saw them until they were in the hands of the Police. She has denied that she ever looked at them in the interval between the accused going away and the Police coming; though this statement seems to contradict her evidence-in-chief. That is the evidence for the prosecution.

The defence was a complete denial of the whole affair and an allegation that it has been foisted upon the accused by the Gollas in order to take away suspicion from themselves. The prosecution therefore say that the inference of guilt is sufficient to enable us to uphold this conviction and they summarize their case as follows: First, they say there has been a murder. Secondly that, from the accused has been recovered jewels proved to have been on the body at the time of the murder. We may say that it is amply established that the jewels, M. Os. Nos. 3, 4 and 5, were the property of the deceased and were worn by her on the day of her death. We agree with the learned Judge in his conclusion with regard to that. Thirdly, the prosecution says that there is a statement receivable within s. 27, Evidence Act, which led to the discovery of a fact and is, therefore, admissible and which contained a confession so wrapped up with the statement leading to the discovery of the fact as to make it, even though it was a confessional statement, admissible under s. 27. Had the statement been free from the infirmities to which we shall later refer, this contention with regard to its admissibility might have been acceptable. We think that the learned Judge rightly admitted that part of it as is reproduced in Ex. J on the basis that it was an ordinary statement under s. 27. But was it an ordinary statement under s. 27? We take the view that it was not. It contained a confession extracted from the accused by a process which we consider wholly foreign to methods and notions which are accepted by the Courts and, we hope, by the heads of the Police themselves. This man had been persistently questioned at Goladi; he was persistently questioned for hours at Mettavalasa throughout being under arrest and we consider that this process was such as to taint any result which may arise from

it. It was a clear breach, in our view of the Police instructions, which are not to pester people who are under arrest as this man undoubtedly was. We consider that so far as the statement was a confession, it was not a voluntary confession and was not receivable in evidence. We see no reason why the general rule that a confession should be voluntary should not apply to a confessional statement under s. 27; but in any case, induced as it was, it is of no evidential value. We therefore exclude from consideration of this case the statement attributed to the accused, and we are left entirely with the fact that he took the Police to the house of his sister and there produced the jewellery which was on the body of the deceased the day before. The position therefore is that the prosecution must rely on the presumption of guilt which has to be drawn from this recent possession of jewellery taken from a murdered person. But the answer to that is that there is no evidence on which we can say with certainty that the deceased was murdered at all. It is probable that she was murdered. But it is not impossible, according to the evidence on the record that she might have died otherwise and not necessarily by strangling. The stab wound and the possibility of it being a wound from a tusk of a bear cannot be overlooked. The nature of the wild animals in this part of the world was not investigated, but there were wild pigs according to the evidence. The fact is, however, that the cause of her death is not proved. That being so, the presumption which might well have been hostile to the accused within the decision in Narayana v. Emperor (1) does not arise. The only evidence we have against this man when Ex. J is rejected is that he was in recent possession of jewellery belonging to a woman who had died owing to an unknown cause. That being so, it is inevitable in our view that this case must fail. It may be that the accused is fortunate. But if the Police in excess of zeal think fit to employ methods of this sort, they must expect results of this sort also. In view of the above observations, we are satisfied that it would be in the highest degree unsafe to maintain this conviction. The conviction will therefore be set aside, the appeal allowed, and the appellant set at liberty.

Criminal Revision Applications Nos 366, 367, 368 and 369 of 1938

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Bombay Prevention of Adulteration Act (V of 1925). s. 4—Applicability to sale of articles of food of which ghee is necessary ingredient—Alleged adulterated ghee taken from shop where sweetmeats were offered for sale—Presumption—Burden to show that article is adulterated—Criminal trial—Revision—Question of fact not disputed in lower Court, if can be introduced in revision.

Section 4, Bom. Prev. of Adul. Act, does not apply only to the sale of ghee simply as such but applies also to the sale of articles of food of which it is a necessary ingredient. The words of the section are wide enough to include articles of food which contain ghee mixed with other substance.

The fact that this ghee was taken from a shop where sweetmeats and pakorae were offered for sale, and indeed from a frying-pan in which other sweetmeats and pakorae were being made, makes it quite clear that the presumption apart, the admission of the accused himself apart, the sweetmeats and pakorae in his shop had been manufactured for sale within the meaning of s. 4 (1) (b) of the Act and that he was manufacturing and offering for sale sweetmeats and pakorae as containing pure ghee which contained the alleged impure ghee.

It is true that the burden of proof that the article of food is adulterated lies upon the prosecution, but that burden may in effect be assisted or even completely discharged by the admissions of the accused himself.

High Court sitting in revision cannot allow the applicant to introduce before it questions of fact which, as they were not disputed, by implication were admitted in the lower Court.

Ori. R. Apps. from the order of the City Magistrate, Shikarpur, dated October 12, 1938.

Mr. H. T. Raymond, for the Applicants.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Davis, J. C.—This is an application in revision against an order of the City Magistrate of Shikarpur, convicting the applicant of an offence under s. 4, Bom. Prev. of Adul. Act of 1925. Objections were taken to the order of this Magistrate based on questions of fact which, if they had been taken in a lower Court in the same manner in which they have been taken by the learned Advocate for the applicant in this Court, might possibly have secured an acquittal for the accused. But we are sitting here in revision and we cannot allow the applicant to introduce before us in revision questions of fact which, as they were not disputed, by implication, were admitted in the lower Court. For instance, it was argued that the Health Officer of the Shikarpur Municipality was not an Inspector validly appointed, as required by s. 8 of the Act; but whether he was or was not so appointed quite clearly must turn upon questions of fact which cannot be raised before us for the first time in revision. Similarly it was objected before us that the summons did not contain the necessary particulars required by s. 13 of the Act, but although the case was adjourned from time to time in the lower Court and the complaint which was before the Court and a copy of which was most certainly served upon the accused contained all the necessary particulars required by s. 13, no objection was taken as to the summons itself. We think the proper inference to be drawn under the circumstances is that the summons was in order, accompanied as undoubtedly it was, by a copy of the complaint.

The principal objection taken, however, was that the accused did not sell ghee and that he has been convicted for sale of adulterated ghee; while what in fact he sold were sweetmeats or *pakor*as and it is not proved that these *pakor*as or sweetmeats as sold by the accused purported to contain pure ghee, or that their nature, substance or quality was such that pure ghee was an ingredient in their manufacture. We do not accept the argument that s. 4, Adul. Act, applies only to the sale of ghee simply as such and does not apply to the sale of articles of food of which it is a necessary ingredient. For, apart from the fact that the words of the section are wide enough to include articles of food which contain ghee mixed with other substance, to accept this argument would be to frustrate one of the purposes of the Act which is to secure that articles of food purporting to be sold as pure and unadulterated are pure and unadulterated and that the purchaser should buy what he is led to expect he is purchasing, or what he is led to expect is sold to him. Therefore, if in this case the accused had taken the defence that while it is true he sold sweetmeats or *pakor*as, it was not expected, nor did he by implication suggest, that they were made of pure ghee, he might have made a good defence upon the record as it stands. But he did not take that defence at all; on the contrary, he contended that the ghee was pure and was of good quality; and that if analysis showed a certain percentage of foreign matter, that came not from the ghee but from the other substances with which it was mixed in the frying-pan from which the sample of ghee was taken. But, again, this defence has nothing to recommend it beyond its apparent ingenuity. Because in a case of *pakor*as and of sweetmeats there is nothing else besides ghee which could contain that percentage of foreign fat which the analysis in this case showed. Moreover, the evidence will show that the sample of the ghee was taken before it was mixed or combined with the other ingredients in the frying-pan. Far then from the accused taking the defence that the sweetmeats or *pakor*as he sold did not purport to contain pure ghee, his case was that they did contain pure ghee and it appears clear from the evidence on the record that this case of his is false.

It is said that the learned Magistrate has wrongly relied upon Explan. 2 which appeared in s. 4 of the Act before its amendment by the Amending Act of 1935. But really Explan. 2 in no way affects the prosecution case, because while it is true the Magistrate in his judgment quotes this Explanation and says that it raises a presumption that the articles were manufactured for the purposes of sale, he goes on to say that the fact that the sweetmeats and *pakor*as were intended for sale is admitted by the accused also. Moreover, the fact that this ghee was taken from a shop where sweetmeats and *pakor*as were offered for sale, and indeed from a frying-pan in which other sweetmeats and *pakor*as were being made, makes it quite clear that the presumption apart, the admission of the accused himself apart, the sweetmeats and *pakor*as in his shop had been manufactured for sale within the meaning of s. 4 (1) (b) of the Act and that he was manufacturing and offering for sale sweetmeats and *pakor*as as containing pure ghee which contained impure ghee.

Lastly, a point was taken that the accused has been convicted under s. 4 generally of the Act and that section contains many parts, and reference was made to a previous judgment of this Court, where this question of the different parts of s. 4, Adul. Act, was referred to; but the facts of that case were entirely different. In that case there was confusion on the part of all parties concerned, confusion as to the offence of which the accused was charged and of which he was convicted, while in this particular case from the details given in the complaint and from the evidence recorded, it is perfectly clear that the conviction is under s. 4 (1) (b) of the Act. There is nothing then in this question to admit of a mistake. It is true of course that the burden of proof lies upon the prosecution, but that burden may in effect be assisted or even completely discharged by the admissions of the accused himself. We think, therefore, there is no reason why we should interfere in revision in this case and we dismiss the revision application accordingly. We also have before us three other revision applications Nos. 367 of 1938, 368 of 1938 and 369 of 1938 in which the facts and the arguments are similar. The reasons and the arguments of our decision in the case with which we have just dealt apply equally effectually in the case of these three other revision applications now before us; hence we dismiss them all accordingly.

D. Applications dismissed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT
Miscellaneous Case No. 186 of 1938

COLLISTER AND ALLSOP, JJ.
T. H. CHANDLER—APPLICANT

MRS. A. CHANDLER—OPPOSITE PARTY
Divorce Act (IV of 1869), ss. 36, 37—Alimony—Subsequent unchastity of wife, effect—Bench passing decree nisi observing that alimony should be continued so long as wife remained chaste and unmarried—Observation, whether binding on another Bench confirming decree and making order for permanent alimony—Such order not containing dum sola et casta clause—Order cannot be varied or discharged on ground of subsequent unchastity.

Observations made by a Bench of the High Court which passed the decree nisi to the effect that alimony could only be paid so long as the wife remained chaste and unmarried, could have no effect beyond the period of interim alimony and would not be binding on the another Bench which confirms the decree nisi and which passes orders as regards permanent alimony. If there is no dum sola et casta clause in the order making the decree nisi absolute and granting alimony to the wife, that order, should not be varied or discharged on the ground of subsequent unchastity. Collins v. Collins (1), followed.

Mr. S. M. Faizullah, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. N. Seth, for the Opposite Party.

Collister, J.—These are two cross-petitions. One is by Annie Chandler praying that the alimony which was allowed to her by this Court be increased from Rs. 12-8-0 per mensem to Rs. 20 per mensem and the other is by Thomas Henry Chandler praying that the order of alimony be discharged or modified on the ground of unchastity on the part of Annie Chandler. Annie Chandler petitioned for dissolution of her marriage or, in the alternative, for judicial separation, in the Court of the District Judge of Cawnpore. The District Judge on March 27, 1926, dismissed the petition for dissolution of marriage, but granted a decree for judicial separation and directed the respondent to pay his wife Rs. 10 per mensem as maintenance. There was an appeal by the petitioner, i. e. Annie Chandler, to this Court, and on April 11, 1927, the appeal was allowed and a decree nisi was granted. In the course of their order the learned Judges said:

"By s. 36 our powers of granting alimony are limited, until the decree is made absolute to the sum of Rs. 10, which is the sum awarded by the Court below. We have no power under s. 37 to grant permanent alimony until the decree is made absolute, which cannot happen until after the expiration of six months. But in order to save the parties' further expenditure, we express the decided opinion that when the decree is made absolute, there are no grounds upon which the Court ought to increase the permanent alimony to a sum larger than that which has been fixed for the alimony pendente lite."

At the end of their order the learned Judges said that the payment of Rs. 10 a month would only continue while the petitioner remained chaste and unmarried. The decree nisi was made absolute by another Bench of this Court on July 5, 1929. The alimony was fixed at Rs. 12-8-0 per mensem, being Rs. 2-8-0 in excess of the amount which had been fixed pendente lite; and the order of this Court confirming the decree nisi contained no clause to the effect that this alimony should only be paid during chastity. It is obvious that the observations of the Bench which passed the decree nisi to the effect that alimony could only be paid so long as the petitioner remained chaste and unmarried could have no effect beyond the period of interim alimony and would not be binding on the Bench which confirmed the decree nisi and which passed orders as regards permanent alimony; and as we have shown, the order under which the decree nisi was made absolute contains no dum sola et casta clause. In Collins v. Collins (1) it was held that where, upon a decree absolute being obtained by a wife on a petition for divorce against her husband, an order is made for the payment of a fixed sum for her maintenance by the divorced husband, and in such order, there is no dum sola et casta clause inserted, the Court cannot vary the order as made where the divorced husband alleges that his wife has been guilty of adultery. The dum sola et casta clause must be inserted in the order; it will never be inferred. The Court observed :

"The argument of the respondent's Counsel really amounts to this, that in every order of the present kind which is made a dum sola et casta clause ought to be included. If, in fact, such a clause is inserted, it is expressed; if by any chance it is not inserted, it ought to be inferred. I cannot think that such a contention is right. When an order of this kind is made, all the circumstances of the case are considered and it is then determined, subject to any appeal that may be made, whether the dum sola et casta clause should be inserted; and I think that there is no more reason now for varying that order than for saying that an order which does not contain the clause ought by implication to be held to contain it. It is not suggested that the means of the husband have been altered. The only question before me is the alleged misconduct of the wife. About that I know nothing and say nothing, and in any case it is not enough to entitle the present motion to succeed."

This is authority for the proposition that if there is no dum sola et casta clause in the order granting alimony to the wife, that order should not be varied or discharged on the ground of subsequent unchastity. In the present case, as we have already shown, there was no such clause or condition in the order of July 5, 1929, under which the decree nisi was made absolute and the amount of permanent alimony was settled. In the circumstances, the petition of Thomas Henry Ohandler fails and is dismissed with costs. As regards the application of Annie Chandler for enhancement of the amount of alimony, there is an affidavit by Thomas Henry Ohandler containing an averment to the effect that he has been discharged by the company in whose service he was; and in view of this affidavit, the learned Counsel on behalf of Annie Ohandler states that he does not press his application. In the circumstances, this application also is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 16 of 1937

DAVIS, J. O. AND TYABJI, J.

DOLARAM ARATMAL—APPELLANT

versus

MULOMAL RADHAKISHINDAS

AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182 (5)—
In accordance with law—Application held not in accordance with law—Failure of Court to see whether requirements of rr. 11 to 14 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), are complied with—Decree-holder, if protected from consequences of time-barred application.

Although the duty is cast upon the Court under O. XXI, r. 17, Civil P. C., to see whether the requirements of rr. 11 to 14, are complied with, the decree-holder is not protected if the Court fails to do so, from the ordinary consequences which follow when his request to the Court for its assistance is barred by time.

It is a matter of policy laid down by the Legislature that applications to the Court for its assistance must be made in time whether that application takes the form of a plaint or an application in execution.

An application for execution dated February 1, 1932, which on the face of it was time-barred was not an execution application made in accordance with law, as it did not mention a previous execution application dated February 5, 1929, which it should have mentioned if the application of February 1, 1932, itself was to be in time. But the Court instead of complying with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 17, admitted the application and ordered notices to issue and costs to be deposited. In the subsequent application dated December 8, 1932, the decree-holder again failed to mention the application of February 5, 1929, but subsequently applied for amendment of the application :

Held, that the application of December 8, 1932, was barred and that there was no substance in allowing the amendment as the application of February 1, 1932, which omitted reference to the application of February 5, 1929, and which was consequently out of time was not in accordance with law and it therefore did not give fresh starting point for limitation. The fact that it was an error to allow the execution of February 1, 1932, did not make any difference. 65 Ind. Cas. 14 (1), relied on, Fusloor Rahman v. Altaf Hussain (2) and 93 Ind. S. A. against the order of the First Class Sub-Judge, Sukkur, dated January 5, 1937.

Mr. Srikishindas Lulla, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kundanmal Dayaram, for the Respondents.

Davis, J. C.—This is an appeal against a judgment of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Sukkur with appellate powers in which he allowed an appeal against an order of the Joint Subordinate Judge of Shikarpur who allowed execution to proceed upon an execution application dated December 8, 1932, of a decree dated September 20, 1922. The appeal was allowed on the ground that a previous execution application dated February 1, 1932, was not an execution application made in accordance with law, as it did not mention a yet more previous execution application dated February 5, 1929, which it should have mentioned if the application of February 1, 1932, itself was to be in time. There were in these proceedings five execution applications: the first was of March 8, 1924; the second of March 20, 1925; the third of February 5, 1929; the fourth of February 1, 1932, and the fifth and last is that which is the subject of the appeal and is dated December 8, 1932. Now there can be no doubt that the execution application of February 1, 1932, was not made in accordance with law. It omitted all reference to the previous execution application of February 5, 1929, so that between the application of March 20, 1925, and the application of February 1, 1932, there was a period of more than three years and the application dated February 1, 1932, should have been rejected by the Court under O. XXI, r. 17, Civil P. C., as being barred by time. But the Court did not comply with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 17, as on the face of it the execution application was time-barred, but ordered notice to issue under O. XXI, r. 22, and costs to be deposited. No costs were in fact deposited, so that this execution application was infructuous. In the execution application of December 8, 1932, the decree-holder omitted to mention the execution application of February 5, 1929, and the executing Court allowed the application of December 8, to be amended in exercise of its discretion; but as the learned Appellate Judge has pointed out, this amendment would be of no avail if the execution application preceding it, namely that of February 1, 1932, was itself out of time by reason of the fact that it omitted to mention the previous application of February 5, 1929. There was no point therefore in allowing the execution application of December 8, 1932, to be amended when the previous application of February 1, 1932, itself was time-barred.

Now the learned Advocate who has appeared for the decree-holder and has argued the case with great diligence and care contends that even if the omission to state in the execution application of February 1, 1932, the previous execution application of February 5, 1929, is a material omission so as to make the execution application in which that omission occurs not in accordance with law, yet the case before us can well be distinguished from the case in Sahjram Tahilram v. Tower (1), in that, in this case the Court, however, wrongly accepted the execution application of February 1, 1932, ordered it to be registered and costs to be deposited; and the fact that costs were not deposited did not affect the case; for once the Court ordered the execution application to be registered, it must be deemed that that execution application was in accordance with law. Under O. XXI, r. 17, the duty rests upon the Court of seeing that an application in execution is within time. The learned Advocate relies strongly upon two cases, wherein the point is stressed that the decree-holder should not suffer for the fault of the Court. In Fuzloor Rahman v. Altaf Hussain (2), the defect was not a material defect at all. It was merely a case where the wrong number of a suit was given; while in the Madras case in Maheswaran Nambudripad v. Velappa Menon (3), the point was again stressed that the party should not be made to suffer by reason of the failure of the Court to check the correctness of the entries in the execution application. But we think that if we listened to this argument ad misericordiam in this case, we should just as well listen to it in a case where a plaint on the face of it is time-barred and should not have been accepted by the Court. We do not think that a plaintiff, when at some later stage in his suit the fact that his suit was time-barred was discovered, could be heard to say that he should not suffer because the Court should not have accepted the plaint in the first instance. We do not think that because the duty is cast upon the Court under O. XXI, r. 17, to see whether the requirements of rr. 11 to 14, Civil P. C., are complied with, the decree-holder is therefore protected from the ordinary consequences which follow when his request to the Court for its assistance is barred by time. The matter of time so far as execution application is concerned is dealt with in Art. 182 (5); Sch. I, Lim. Act, and we think, it matters not whether the Court has before it a plaint or execution application, the burden lies upon the Court under any circumstances to see that its assistance is sought for in time. If it does not do so, then we do not think that either the plaintiff or the decree-holder is freed from the consequences of his delay. It is a matter of policy laid down by the Legislature that applications to the Court for its assistance must be made in time and whether that application takes the form of a plaint or an application in execution, we think it matters not.

We think, therefore, there is no real difference between this case and the case in Sahigram Tahilram v. Tower (1), by which we are bound. The learned Advocate referred us to another case, the case in Pittambar Jana v. Damodhar Gachait (4), at p. 673, but again in that case the Court had before it an execution application which was not defective in material particulars. In that case Suhrawardy, J. said:

"On a consideration of the cases to which I have made reference and the other cases which have been cited at the Bar, the conclusion to which I have arrived is that the expression 'in accordance with law' in Art. 182 (5) should be taken to mean that the application though defective in some particulars was such upon which execution could be issued."

The case, however, before us is quite clear. The Court could not order execution to issue upon an application that was on the face of it out of time. The fact that it was an error to allow the execution application to be registered appears to us to make no difference. We think, therefore, the judgment of the lower Court is right and the appeal is dismissed with costs accordingly.

RESPONDENT

Muhammadan Law—Marriage—Sunnis—Option of puberty—Such right is prolonged till woman has knowledge of such right—But must be exercised within reasonable time of her knowledge—Burden of proving knowledge—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 106.

A woman's right of repudiating the marriage performed during her minority is prolonged amongst Sunni Muhammadans until she is acquainted with the fact that she has such a right. In other words the woman has the right of repudiating the marriage within reasonable time of her knowledge of the fact that she has the power to repudiate the marriage. 63 Ind. Cas. 702 (1) and 113 Ind. Cas. 183 (2), relied on, 76 Ind. Cas. 45 (3), not followed.

The fact, that a woman has knowledge of her marriage or of her right to exercise the option of puberty at a particular time, must be specially within her knowledge, and therefore the burden of proving such fact must, in view of the provisions of s. 106, Evi. Act, be on her. 137 Ind. Cas. 739 (4), not followed.

S A. from the decision of the District Judge, Bulandshahr, dated October 19, 1936.

Messrs. M. A. Aziz and Ihsanul Haq, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent for a declaration that the marriage of the plaintiff with the defendant stood dissolved in consequence of the exercise of the "option of puberty" by the plaintiff. It is common ground that the parties to the present litigation are Sunni Muhammadans and that they were married in July, 1926. The plaintiff's case was that she was nine years of age at the time of her marriage with the defendant and that her brother Zahiruddin acted as her guardian for the marriage. She further alleged that, some time before the institution of the suit, she became aware of the fact of the marriage and at once exercised the "option of repudiation" and intimated the fact of the repudiation of the marriage to the defendant by means of a written notice. The defendant contested the suit on the allegation that the plaintiff had attained puberty at the time of the marriage. He denied that the plaintiff had the option to repudiate the marriage or that she ever exercised that option. The trial Court held that the plaintiff had attained majority at the time of the marriage, and that, even if she exercised the "option of repudiation," she did so long after she had attained puberty. In view of these findings, the trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal by the plaintiff the lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was about nine years of age on the date of the marriage and that "she had not attained puberty at the time of the nikah." This finding of the lower Appellate Court being based on the evidence in the case, is binding on me in second appeal. Having arrived at this finding, the lower Appellate Court proceeded to consider the question whether the option of puberty had in fact been exercised "without unreasonable delay" and it held that "it is proved that the option of puberty has been exercised and without unreasonable delay." The only reason given by the lower Appellate Court in support of this finding is in the following words:

"As to this it is in evidence that the plaintiff consulted a pleader in Aligarh and had a notice issued to the defendant-respondent."

I am unable to appreciate the reason assigned by the lower Appellate Court in support of its finding on the question as to whether the "option of puberty" was exercised by the plaintiff and that without unreasonable delay. It may be that the finding recorded by the lower Appellate Court on the question is correct or it may be that that Court, without applying its mind to the evidence bearing on the question, recorded the above finding. Be that as it may, the finding does not appear to be satisfactory and accordingly I cannot decide this appeal without having findings on certain issues that I propose to remit to the lower Appellate Court. The law on the question as to when a female, who was married during her minority, should, if she so desires, exercise the right of option to repudiate the marriage, has been settled by this Court in Bismillah Begum v. Nur Muhammad (1) and Sughra v. Muzaffari (2). It was held in these cases that the rule laid down by Imam Muhammad is the more reasonable and equitable to be applied to India, namely that a woman's right of repudiating the marriage performed during her minority is prolonged amongst Sunni Muhammadans until she is acquainted with the fact that she has such a right. In other words the woman has the right of repudiating the marriage within reasonable time of her knowledge of the fact that she has the power to repudiate the marriage. Having regard to these decisions, it is necessary to have findings from the lower Appellate Court on the following issues: (1) When did the plaintiff for the first time repudiate the marriage? (2) When did the plaintiff first come to know that she had the right to exercise the option of repudiating the marriage? Parties will be allowed to adduce further evidence on the point and the findings will be returned to this Court within four months from to-day's date. On receipt of the findings, the usual ten days will be allowed for filing objections. The learned Counsel for the respondent placed reliance on the decision of the Lahore High Court in Khanoo v. Bhaq Bhari, 76 Ind. Cas. 45 (3). The learned Judge, who decided that case, observed:

"That the principle underlying the crude provision of Muhammadan Law that the option of puberty must be exercised by a female immediately on the appearance of the physical signs of puberty, which was promulgated to people living under very different conditions from those which obtain to-day, is that there must be no acquiescence in the marriage by the female, so that the question in all such cases is whether the plaintiff has acquiesced in the marriage."

With all respect I am unable to agree with this decision. In the first place I am unable to appreciate what the learned Judge meant by the phrase "crude provision of Muhammadan Law." So far as I can see, the provision entitling a minor girl to exercise the option of repudiating the marriage far from being crude is in consonance with the rules of conduct governing a progressive state of society, which allows a person on whose behalf a contract has been entered into during her minority to elect on attaining majority whether she would affirm or repudiate the contract. Apart from this, to hold that a woman has the right to exercise the option of repudiating the marriage so long as she has not acquiesced in the marriage would be to legislate for the Muslims and not to follow the dictates of Muhammadan Law, and this the Court is not competent to do. It is to be remembered that there are two parties to a contract of marriage, viz., the husband and the wife and while the law gives the wife in certain cases the option to repudiate the marriage, that option has to be exercised within reasonable time as it is not in the interest of society that the finality of the marriage tie should be kept in suspense for an unreasonable length of time.

The learned Counsel for the respondent further placed reliance on a decision of the Lahore High Court in Mukhan v. Haidar (4). It was held in that case that a Muhammadan girl is entitled to exercise her option of puberty within a reasonable time from her knowledge of marriage or from her knowledge of the fact that she has right to repudiate the marriage on attaining puberty. To this extent this decision of the Lahore High Court is in consonance with the two decisions of this Court noted above. But it was further held in that case that the burden of proving that the plaintiff had knowledge of her marriage or of her right to exercise the option of puberty any considerable time before the institution of the suit lies on the husband. Again with all respect I am unable to agree with this proposition of law. The fact, that a woman has knowledge of her marriage or of her right to exercise the option of puberty at a particular time, must be specially within her knowledge, and therefore the burden of proving

BROOMFIELD AND MACKLIN, JJ.

DATTATRAYA VISHNU DABHOLKAR

—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

SADASHIV SHIVRAM NISAL—

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4—Suit relating to property subject of grant—Plaintiff's claim independent of grant—If falls under s. 4—Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), s. 4 (f) (d), Proviso—Government having no interest in revenue of alienated village—Applicability of s. 4 (f)—Purchaser from inamdar claiming to be shown in village papers as person entitled to revenue—Suit, if barred by s. 4 (d) against Government—Proper order to be passed in such case—Dispute as to who is entitled to be holder—S. 4, Proviso, if applies—Inam—Grant—Construction—Grant held conferred heritable and alienable estate.

The Pensions Act is to be construed strictly in favour of the right of suit. A suit relating to property which has been the subject of a grant, but in which plaintiff's claim is quite independent of the grant is not a suit relating to a grant of land revenue within the meaning of s. 4, Pensions Act. [p. 841, col. 2.]

Clause (f) of s. 4, Bom. Revenue Jurisdiction Act can have no application to the case of an alienated village where Govt. has ceased to have any interest in the revenue at all.

Although the Revenue Jurisdiction Act is to be construed strictly, that does not mean that it should be construed so technically as to make its provisions a dead letter. [p. 842, col. 1.]

Where in a suit brought by a purchaser of a share of a village from inamdar, the plaintiff wants to be shown in the village papers as the person entitled to the revenue of the village, he really claims to be the superior holder as defined in the Bom. Land Revenue Code, and the suit is barred by s. 4 (d) against Govt. and the Govt. cannot be ordered not to pay the revenue to the inamdar but to pay it to the plaintiff direct. An injunction against Govt. to pay the plaintiff direct, and not to pay the superior holder, would be contrary to the spirit, if not to the express terms, of the Land Revenue Code. The relation between Govt. and the superior holder is not affected by the sale of the superior holder's rights. The proper thing to do in such a case is to order the inamdar to pay it to the plaintiff as soon as he receives it from the treasury. [p. 843, col. 1.]

The proviso to s. 4, relates to cases where there is a dispute as to the nature of a holding, that is to say, as to whether it is exempt from the payment of land revenue or not. It does not relate to disputes as to who is entitled to be the holder.

Held, on construction that grant was not saranjam but conferred heritable and alienable estate. 174 Ind. Cas. 256 (1), relied on.

S. As. against the decision of the First Class Sub-Judge, Ahmednagar, in Appeal No. 191 of 1932.

Messrs G. N. Thakor and P. V. Nijure, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. G. Desai and J. G. Rele and B. G. Rao (Assistant Government Pleader), for the Respondents.

Broomfield, J.—These are two appeals by the defendants against a decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmednagar with appellate powers in a suit relating to a share in the villages of Akolner and Khedle Parmanand in the Ahmednagar District. The facts are briefly these. Vishnu Moreswar Dabholkar and his brother Janardhan, who were the owners of a two-annas share in the village of Akolner and a six annas share in the village of Khedle Parmanand, mortgaged their share along with other property to Sadashiv Shivram, who is respondent No. 1 in these appeals. This mortgage was in January, 1915. In 1920, a suit was brought on the mortgage against the two mortgagors and their sons, among whom was Dattatraya Vishnu Dabholkar, who is respondent No. 2 in Appeal No. 293 and the appellant in Appeal No. 187. A decree was passed by consent in 1921 for an amount of Rs. 32,000 odd. Eventually the mortgaged property was put to sale and purchased by Sadashiv. The latter made applications to the revenue authorities to get his name entered in the place of Vishnu Moreswar in the village records, and to get his share of the amount paid to him by the village officers. These applications were refused. The appeals made to the superior revenue authorities and to Govt. were unsuccessful, and accordingly this suit was filed in December 1930.

For our purposes it will be sufficient to state the reliefs claimed in the suit. They were, firstly, a declaration that the shares in the two villages are of the ownership of the plaintiff Sadashiv by right of purchase; secondly, a declaration that the name of defendant No. 2, Dattatraya Vishnu, whose name was entered in the records on the death of his father in 1926 should be removed and the name of the plaintiff entered instead as the owner of the shares in the villages. Alternatively, it was prayed that Dattatraya's name might be retained nominally and the plaintiff's name entered as the purchaser of the shares. It was further prayed that the amount of plaintiff's share should be paid to him directly by the village officers and that defendant No. 1, i. e. the Secretary of State, should be requested to give proper and necessary orders to the village officers in respect of the plaintiff's management of the villages. It was further asked that a sum of Rs. 2,500, which had been collected and was held in the treasury should be paid to the plaintiff.

The trial Court found that the grant of these villages was a saranjam grant, that it was a grant of the royal share of the revenue only, that a certificate under the Pensions Act was therefore necessary and that the suit against the Secretary of State was barred under the Revenue Jurisdiction Act. Accordingly, the suit was dismissed. On appeal, the learned First Class Subordinate Judge took a different view. He decided that the grant was not saranjam but personal inam, that it was not inalienable, that it was a grant of the soil and not merely of the revenue, and therefore no certificate under the Pensions Act was necessary, and that the suit was not barred by s. 4, Bom. Revenue Jurisdiction Act, as found by the trial Court. He therefore reversed the trial Court's decree, gave a declaration that the plaintiff has a two annas share in the village of Akolner and a six annas share in the village of Khedle Parmanand, ordered that the plaintiff's name should be entered in the accounts of the two villages, and ordered further that defendant No. 2, i. e. Dattatraya, should refrain from obstructing the plaintiff in receiving the amount direct from the treasuries, and that defendant No. 1, the Secretary of State, should arrange to pay the amount of plaintiff's share to him direct, and should also pay the sum of Rs. 2,500 lying in the treasury to the plaintiff. Against this decree, appeals have been brought both by Dattatraya. Appeal No. 187, and by the Secretary of State, Appeal No. 293.

I propose to deal first with the appeal of Dattatraya, defendant No. 2. The learned Counsel who appears for him has contended (1) that the grants in question were saranjam, i. e. for life only and inalienable, and that therefore the mortgage was void, (2) that if the grants were not strictly saranjam, nevertheless the estate conveyed was inalienable, (3) that there was a grant of the revenue only and not of the soil, and therefore a certificate was necessary under the Pensions Act, and (4) that the suit is barred by the Bom. Revenue Jurisdiction Act. It will be convenient to mention here the position taken up by Govt. in this case. It supports the other appellant as to the suit being barred by the Revenue Jurisdiction Act. It contends, however, that the grants in question are personal inam and not saranjam. It has not contended that a certificate is necessary under the Pensions Act, and it has not disputed the plaintiff's right to get the revenue from defendant No. 2 after it has been paid to the latter in due course from the Govt. treasuries.

The grants with which we are concerned are very ancient. The earliest documents now on record are two sanads of the year 1751, Exs. 138 and 139, relating to the villages of Akolner and Khedle Parmanand, respectively. They refer to former grants of the villages to the ancestor of defendant No. 2, and confirm the grants as regards Babs Forzdari, Amanat and Sekhdari and Kotwali, and Farmayash, and Chakari. The grant was made in favour of the grantee and his heirs lineal or collateral from generation to generation. In the year 1753 we have a sanad, Ex. 107, which relates to both the villages Akolner and Khedle Parmanand, and a third village Navagaon. It describes them as villages of Moglai Ammal in which the Moglai Ammal was enjoyed before, and probably, although the language is not very clear, it was merely a confirmation of the rights previously granted. Subsequently, by Ex. 109, there was a grant of the Swaraj Ammal in the villages of Akolner and Navagaon in addition to the Moglai Ammal. This sanad contained an important recital that the Ammals were granted including Kulbab Kulkanu and rights of trees, water, stones, earth and minerals, which rights were to be enjoyed in inam from generation to generation. Subsequently, it appears that the villages were attached by Govt. and, on the intercession of Daulatrao Scindia with the Peshwa, there was a re-grant in 1779, Exs. 113 and 140. According to the sanad, Ex. 140, the three villages of Akolner, Khedle Parmanand and Navagaon were granted in inam and it was provided that the grantee and his descendants should enjoy the inam from generation to generation.

Exhibits 101 and 89 and 92 and 88 are the proceedings and faisals of the Inam Commission relating to Akolner and Khedle Parmanand, respectively. In each case the old sanads were referred to and treated as conferring a heritable estate. In each case also it was provided that the inam was to continue "so long as there shall remain in existence any male heir in the family of the original grantee Ramaji Anant" and the orders were passed under Sch. B, cl. 2 of Act XI of 1852, that is to say, the procedure followed was that appropriate for heritable grants not saranjam. There was a rather curious difference in the wording of the two faisalanamas. In the case of Akolner the grant was of "the whole of the village Akolner exclusive of Mokasa, Sardeshmukhi Kherij Watani and ancient haks and inams." In the case of Khedle Parmanand what was granted was "the Jahagir Ammal of the village equivalent to half the amount of the total revenue after deducting amounts due to hakdars and the village expenses." But the history of the two villages does not suggest that any difference was intended in the nature of the grant, and in the Alienation Register, Ex. 87, the villages are shown similarly as Class II. Personal inam (not saranjam, which would be Class I), and the grant was described as one of the entire villages in each case.

It is quite clear, we think, that the plaintiff has failed to establish that the villages were granted as saranjam. No doubt the grants were made in the first instance for political or military services. But such grants are not necessarily of the nature of saranjam, and there is nothing in the old sanads to indicate that a mere life-estate was intended. The indications are rather the other way. The grants were not treated as saranjam by the Inam Commission, nor have they ever been so treated since. The rules made by Govt. as to saranjams (see Dandekar's Law of Land Tenure, Vol. 1, p 174) provide that no saranjam shall be capable of sub-division, and also that the grant is liable to be resumed whenever the saranjam or its revenue passes into the hands of a person other than the saranjamdar. In para. 8 of the judgment of the Court of first appeal there is a reference to a case, which I shall have occasion to mention in detail in a moment, when an opportunity clearly arose for resumption under the saranjam rules, had they really applied to the case. Government, however, did not resume but recognized the alienation. Government to whose interest it is to assert that the grants are saranjam, has never done so, and does not do so in this case. It appears that a list is maintained of all saranjam estates and these villages are not in that list.

Mr. Thakor's argument that, even if not saranjam, the grants were inalienable is, we think, clearly untenable. Faisalanamas of the Inam Commission in the same form as those in the present case were held to confer a heritable and alienable estate in Gajanan v. Jankibai (1). Besides, this contention must be regarded as res judicata for the plea that the estate is inalienable and the mortgage therefore invalid ought to have been taken in the mortgage suit. The point under the Pensions Act is not quite so clear. If the case merely depended on the construction of the old sanads and the faisalanamas, it might have been rather difficult perhaps to say that there has been a grant of the soil, at any rate in the case of Khedle Parmanand. But in this connection we have to consider, firstly, that Govt. which would apparently be interested in maintaining that it was a grant of the revenue only, has not in fact taken that position, and, secondly, that defendant No 2, on whose behalf the argument is now put forward, has himself claimed in the witness-box to be the owner of the soil of these villages. Moreover, the Pensions Act is to be construed strictly in favour of the right of suit. Section 4 of the Act, which is relied upon speaks of suits relating to pensions and grants of money or land revenue. This is not strictly speaking a suit relating to a grant of land revenue. There is no dispute as to the fact of the grant, or as to its validity, or as to the persons entitled under it. It is a suit relating to property which has been the subject of a grant, but the plaintiff's claim is quite independent of the grant. If this could have been regarded as a suit relating to a grant of land revenue within the meaning of s. 4, the suit on the mortgage would also seem to have been such a suit, and the defence that a certificate was necessary could have been and ought to have been taken there. We think, therefore, that the objection based on the Pensions Act has properly been disallowed.

Both Mr. Thakor for defendant No 2, and the Assistant Govt. Pleader for the Secretary of State, rely upon s. 4 (d), Revenue Jurisdiction Act, which bars inter alia claims against the Crown to be entered in the village papers as superior holder, inferior holder, occupant or tenant. The argument is that the plaintiff is asking in effect to be entered in the village papers as a superior holder, for a person who claims to have his name either entered in place of or associated with that of the superior holder as being entitled to all the revenue payable to the superior holder is really claiming to be the superior holder himself. "Superior holder" means, according to the definition in the Land Revenue Code, a person entitled to the revenue. Clause (f) of s. 4 has also been relied on, on behalf of defendant No. 2. That clause bars claims against the Crown to receive payments payable out of the land revenue, and it is said that in the present suit the plaintiff is making such a claim. But land revenue is defined in the Revenue Jurisdiction Act as meaning all sums and payments in money or in kind received or claimable by or on behalf of the Crown. It seems clear, therefore, that cl. (f) of s. 4 can have no application to the case of an alienated village where Govt. has ceased to have any interest in the revenue at all.

But, though cl. (f) does not apply, there is, we think, no satisfactory answer to the objection based on cl. (d). Mr. Desai, who appears for the plaintiff, has had to concede that the first relief claimed, viz. that the plaintiff's name should be entered as owner, is obnoxious to the clause. He has argued that the alternative relief is not obnoxious to it because the plaintiff does not ask to be described as a superior holder but only as a purchaser. I have set out in detail the reliefs sought in the plaint, and it is quite clear that the plaintiff wants to be shown in the village paper as the person entitled to the revenue of the village and such a person is the superior holder as defined in the Bom. Land Revenue Code. Although the Revenue Jurisdiction Act, like the Pensions Act is to be construed strictly, that does not mean that it should be construed so technically as to make its provisions a dead letter.

The judgment of the Court of first appeal seems to be based mainly on the orders passed by Govt. in another case of an alienation of a share in the village of Akolner (see Ex. 119). It appears that the eight annas share of one of the inamdars of Akolner had been purchased by one Gadre whose name had been entered in the village accounts in 1880. In 1899 his grandson and heir applied that his name should be substituted. The possession of the share in the village had been all along with the purchaser, and no objection to the entry of the name of the heir was made by the original owners. The only persons objecting were some people who claim to have purchased the rights of the original owners. It appears that in 1882 Govt. passed a resolution that in the case of inam villages such as those with which we are concerned, which are held under special conditions and not summarily settled, it is necessary to be strict and, as a general rule, to refuse to enter sub-divisions. This change of practice is referred to in the written statement put in on behalf of the Secretary of State in this suit. But, apart from that, the orders passed by Govt. in Gadre's case can have no bearing whatever on the question of the jurisdiction of the Courts to control the revenue authorities in such matters. Government may pass any orders that are considered proper in the particular case. One may think that in the circumstances of the present case it would really be more equitable and convenient that the moneys to which the plaintiff is clearly entitled should be paid to him direct, and that if any charges are necessary in the village papers, they should be made. But the matter is entirely within the discretion of Govt. and s. 4, cl. (d), Revenue Jurisdiction Act, debars the Civil Courts from ordering that the entries should be changed.

The learned Judge in the Court of first appeal also appears to have relied on the proviso to s. 4 and on s. 5 of the Act. But in our opinion these have no application whatever to the present case. The proviso to s. 4, as its terms show, relates to cases where there is a dispute as to the nature of a holding, that is to say, as to whether it is exempt from the payment of land revenue or not. It does not relate to disputes as to who is entitled to be the holder. The judgment and decree relied on by plaintiff to bring him within the proviso, that is to say, the judgment and decree in the mortgage suit, had nothing to do with the nature of the holding and the judgment did not declare the property in dispute to be exempt from payment of land revenue. As regards s. 5, cl. (b) of which was apparently relied upon, it is sufficient to say that this is not a suit between private parties because some at any rate of the main reliefs are sought against the Crown.

We must hold therefore that this suit as against Govt. is barred. It follows from that that no order can be made that plaintiff's name should be entered in the village papers, and defendant No. 2 must remain as the superior holder. From that again it seems to follow that Govt. cannot be ordered not to pay the revenue to defendant No. 2 but to pay it to the plaintiff direct. The definition of superior holder in the Land Revenue Code, to which I have already referred, shows that he is entitled to the revenue. Section 85 of the Code provides that he is to receive his dues through the village officers. Under s. 86 the superior holder only is entitled to assistance from Govt. So that an injunction against Govt. to pay the plaintiff direct, and not to pay the superior holder, would be contrary to the spirit, if not to the express terms, of the Land Revenue Code. The relation between Govt. and the superior holder is not affected by the sale of the superior holder's rights.

In a somewhat similar case, already cited in a different connection, Gajanan v. Jankibai (1) an injunction was granted restraining an inamdar from receiving the revenue of his inam which he had alienated. Government was not a party to that case, and it is not clear that there was any objection on the part of Govt. to payment being made to the alienee direct. In any case that does not seem to be a very appropriate method of dealing with the present case. The plaintiff is quite obviously entitled to the share of the income of these villages which he has purchased, and, as long as Govt. is not prepared to pay it to him directly, we think the proper thing to do is to order defendant No. 2 to pay it to the plaintiff as soon as he receives it from the treasury. Such an order, we think, is required by the justice of the case. Mr. Thakor has argued that the plaintiff ought to have filed cross-objections, and, not having done so, is not entitled to any amendment of the decree. But as the decree stood, there was nothing to object to, and, we think, the order we propose to make is covered by r. 33 of O. XXI.

The result is, therefore, that Appeal No. 293 of 1935 will be allowed, and the suit so far as it is against the Secretary of State will be dismissed with costs throughout. As regards Appeal No. 187 of 1935, we substitute a new decree for that of the Code of first appeal. We give the plaintiff a declaration as already allowed by the Court of first appeal, and we also grant a mandatory injunction to defendant No. 2 that he do recover the amounts payable to plaintiff in respect of his shares in the two villages and do immediately pay to him the amounts so recovered. We understand that in consequence of the decree of the Court of first appeal certain payments have already been made to the plaintiff. There is no reason why these moneys should be returned and all payments hitherto paid will stand confirmed. But interest on those payments is not allowed. Defendant No. 2 must pay all plaintiff's costs in the lower Courts, except those occasioned by making defendant No. 1 a party, and will also pay the costs of this appeal to this Court. Civil Application No. 473 of 1938, which was for additional evidence, is dismissed with costs.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 22, 86, O. XXXIV—Notice under O. XXI, r. 86—Judgment-debtor appearing and contesting execution proceedings—Failure to give notice under O. XXI, r. 22, and omission to record reasons for failure—Proceedings, if vitiated—Agricultural land hypothecated in decree—Decree-holder authorised to recover decretal amount by sale—Attachment before sale, if necessary.

Where notice of the execution proceedings and sale thereunder is issued under O. XXI, r. 86, and the judgment-debtor appears and contests these proceedings, it is unnecessary to give the judgment-debtor notice of proceedings that he is already well aware of and failure to give notice under O. XXI, r. 22, and the omission to record reasons dispensing with this notice is no more than an irregularity which does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court. 55 Ind. Cas. 816 (1), 117 Ind. Cas. 648 (2) and 131 Ind. Cas. 702 (3), relied on.

Where in a decree which was based on an award agricultural land was hypothecated and the decree-holder was expressly authorized to get the amount due under the decree realized by sale of the property, the decree comes within the purview of O. XXXIV, Civil P. C. The decree being thus in substance a mortgage decree, it is not necessary to effect attachment of the land before ordering its sale in execution.

Ex. F. A. from an order of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Karnal, dated January 23, 1939.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. F. C. Mittal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—One Chaman Lal who had a mortgage decree against Ladli Parshad for Rs. 14,632 with future interest, made an application for realization of the decretal amount by sale of agricultural land which is described as 515 bighas 7 biswas. The decree was passed on September 2, 1935, and one of the conditions laid down therein was that the decretal amount was payable within three years of the date of the decree. The application for execution was made on October 5, 1938, and a notice of proclamation of sale was issued under O XXI r. 66, Civil P. C. The judgment-debtor appeared and contested the maintainability of the execution proceedings. It appears that no notice under O. XXI, r. 22, Civil P. C. was ever issued and the judgment-debtor objected that in the absence of the issue of such a notice or of reasons for dispensing with this notice, the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed with the execution proceedings and to sell the property. The learned Subordinate Judge to whom the execution application was made overruled this objection holding that the failure to record reasons for not issuing a notice was only an irregularity not amounting to a defect in jurisdiction. It was also objected on behalf of the judgment-debtor that the decree in question was not really a mortgage decree and therefore attachment of land was necessary before orders for its sale were issued, as the decree was based on an award. The third objection which was taken was that only 445 bighas 16 biswas of land were hypothecated but now 515 bighas 7 biswas were intended to be sold.

The learned Subordinate Judge overruled these objections and an appeal has been preferred to this Court through Mr. Shamair Chand who has reiterated these objections. The main point on which the greatest stress has been laid by learned Counsel in arguments is the objection based on the failure to record reasons for not issuing a notice under O. XXI, r. 22. In ordinary circumstances, such a defect would be fatal and a sale concluded in such circumstances would be void but in the present case notice of the execution proceedings and sale thereunder was issued under O. XXI, r. 66 and the judgment-debtor appeared and contested these proceedings. In such circumstances it appears to me that it was unnecessary to give the judgment-debtor notice of proceedings that he was already well aware of and failure to give notice under O. XXI, r. 22 and the omission to record reasons dispensing with this notice is no more than an irregularity which does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court.

The matter appears to me to be covered by authority. In Kora Lal v. Punjab National Bank, Ltd., Multan (1), Sir Shadi Lal, O. J. held that where the Court did issue a notice to the judgment-debtor though it was issued not under O. XXI, r. 22, but under r. 66 and the latter was afforded an opportunity to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him, the object aimed at by r. 22 should be held to be carried out and the mere fact that the notice was not under that rule does not vitiate the proceedings.

It appears to me that this case is very similar in facts to the case before me. The object of the rule is obviously to give an opportunity to the judgment-debtor to urge any objection to the maintainability of execution proceedings, to prevent his being taken by surprise and to afford him an opportunity to satisfy the decree before execution issues. It appears to me that where a person contests a notice under O. XXI, r. 66, he is aware of the proceedings, is not taken by surprise and can, if he so desires, satisfy the decree before the property is brought to sale in the course of execution proceedings. In Fakhrul Islam v. Bhubaneshwari Kuer (2), the facts were that a notice was ordered to be issued under O. XXI, r. 22, but it did not in fact issue and was suppressed. It was held on an application to set aside a sale in execution on the ground that a fresh notice should have been issued, that no fresh notice was necessary. Kulwant Sahay, J. held that if notice was issued but not served and yet the judgment-debtor appeared and raised objection the object of the rule was satisfied. This proposition was laid down with greater emphasis by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in a case reported in Chandra Nath Bagchi v. Nabadwip Chandra Dutt (3). There, too, instead of issuing a notice under O. XXI, r. 22, a notice under O. XXI, r. 66, was issued and the judgment-debtors appeared and objected to the valuation to be inserted in the proclamation of sale and later the sale could not proceed because originally no notice under r. 22, had been issued. Referring to a dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (4), Rankin, C. J. in delivering the judgment of the Division Bench observed that it was quite unnecessary to push the abstract logic of the dictum of the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (4), to the ridiculous extreme that in all circumstances a notice under r. 22, was a condition precedent to the sale before which the Court had no jurisdiction. The learned Judge went on to observe as follows:

"I do not in any way seek to throw doubt upon the proposition that where such a notice had not issued and the party who is entitled to notice does not in substance get notice and is not given or does not take an opportunity to object to the execution of the decree, the sale which follows will be without jurisdiction.....The parties in the present case have been litigating actively upon the question whether this execution should proceed and how it should proceed.....It appears to me to be merely piling unreason upon technicality to hold upon the circumstances of this case that it is open to the judgment-debtors on these grounds to object to the jurisdiction of the Court because they have not got a formal notice to do something, namely, to dispute the execution of the decree when in point of fact they were busy disputing about it in all the Courts for the best part of the last two years. I decline to push the doctrine so far, as that and it seems to me that the execution should proceed."

I am in respectful agreement with the above exposition of law and I hold, therefore, that there is no substance in the objection based on the failure to record reasons for not issuing a notice. It may be observed that the Lahore High Court has by notification of 1932 amended r. 22, O. XXI. by adding to para. 2 thereof words to the effect that failure to record reasons shall be considered an irregularity not amounting to a defect in jurisdiction.

So far as the second objection is concerned, the decree was based on an award and in it agricultural land was hypothecated and the decree-holder was expressly authorized to get the amount due under the decree realized by the sale of the property. This, in my opinion, brought the decree within the purview of O. XXXIV, Civil P. C. The decree being thus in substance a mortgage decree, it was not necessary to effect attachment of the land before ordering its sale in execution. I see no substance in the third objection either, because the area hypothecated was 448 bighas in the decree and this has now become 515 bighas by the addition of shamilat land which was allotted to the judgment-debtor on partition. The shamilat was also hypothecated and the decree-holder is, therefore, entitled to get his decree satisfied out of the whole area hypothecated including the shamilat land which fell to the share of the judgment-debtor. In these circumstances, I see no substance in this appeal which I dismiss with costs.

—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Suit by minor coparceners for accounts of ancestral property in hands of third person—Manager not joined as co-plaintiff but joined as defendant—Suit, if maintainable.

Where the father, the manager of the joint Hindu family is not joined as co-plaintiff, the minor coparceners cannot bring a suit for accounts of the joint ancestral property in the hands of a third party, even if the father is joined as defendant and supports their claim. The minor plaintiffs cannot give that third person a receipt or quitance on settlement of his accounts, even should that person be willing to account. That can be done only by the manager, who therefore, alone is entitled to call for accounts and give a quitance or receipt on settlement. If therefore, the minor plaintiffs cannot give a good quitance or receipt on settlement of accounts, obviously they have no right to sue. Since it is the manager or karta who is alone competent to represent the family, to act for it and to bind it. The device of joining the manager as a defendant does not avoid the difficulty. 168 Ind. Cas. 801 (1), 133 Ind. Cas. 116 (2), 9 Ind. Cas. 759 (3) and *Atagappa Chetti v. Mr. D. N. O'Sullivan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Srikrishindas H. Lulla, for the Respondents.

Davis, J. C.—The suit out of which this miscellaneous second appeal arises is a peculiar one. It was brought in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Shikarpur ostensibly in the names of three minors, the sons of Girdharidas through their grandmother Tulsibai as next friend. Tulsibai was the mother of Girdharidas who was defendant No. 2 and identified herself with and supported the plaintiffs' case. Girdharidas, defendant No. 2 and his minor sons, the plaintiffs, are members of a Hindu joint family and Girdharidas is the guardian-in-law of the minor plaintiffs, and he is the manager of the joint Hindu family. Some explanation as to why he did not himself as plaintiff and manager of the joint Hindu family bring the suit on behalf of himself and his minor sons is obviously called for as the suit purports to be a suit for accounts of joint family property alleged to have been in the hands of defendant No. 1 as trustee since 1907, long before the minor plaintiffs were born, and the minor plaintiffs had asked for their three-fourths share to be awarded them after settlement of accounts. But it is obvious that the plaintiffs as members of a joint Hindu family are not entitled to any specific share in the undivided property, and the learned Advocate for the respondents in this appeal, the minor plaintiffs, dealt discreetly with that part of their claim by dropping it.

The Joint Subordinate Judge who tried the suit, dismissed it holding that the minor plaintiffs had no right to ask for accounts from defendant No. 1 who, it was found, stood in some sort of fiduciary relationship to defendant No. 2, but it was defendant No. 2 alone who was entitled to call on defendant No. 1 to account. The First Class Subordinate Judge in appeal, however, held that the minor plaintiffs as having a right independent of their father in the joint ancestral property in the hands of defendant No. 1 had a right to call upon defendant No. 1 to account, and he found that the fact that the father was joined as defendant No. 2 brought all necessary parties upon the record, and made the case complete. He did not refer to the fact that the minor plaintiffs, though undivided, claimed their separate share in the joint family property, apart from their father defendant No. 2, though the suit was not a suit for partition, nor did he refer to the fact that the minor plaintiffs could not give a receipt or quit-tance to defendant No. 1, even if he was prepared to account, and could not therefore be in a position to sue. He therefore allowed the appeal and reversed the order of the trial Judge dismissing the suit. Defendant No. 1 has appealed.

There is no real dispute about the facts in this case. Radhakrishindas, the father of Girdharidas, the father of the minor plaintiffs, died in 1907, and on his death Radhakrishindas' widow, the minors' present next friend, not unnaturally, approached defendant No. 1 Khemchand, her late husband's nephew, to look after the property and safeguard the interests of her minor son Girdharidas, the present defendant No. 2, then aged six years old. Khemchand agreed. Also it is not now disputed, and it is found by both the lower Courts that whether Khemchand was a trustee de son tort or not, he was bound to account for the property whatever its value, which on the death of the father of defendant No. 2 he, at the request of the mother of defendant No. 2, undertook to administer and safeguard. The only question of difference between the two lower Courts is as to whom defendant No. 1 should be called upon to account—defendant No. 2 as the trial Court finds or to the minor plaintiffs as the lower Appellate Court finds? Our view is that he cannot be called upon to account by the minor plaintiffs in this suit.

Before us the case was argued at first broadly on the ground that the minor plaintiffs alone could not sue for accounts of the joint family property in the hands of defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 2 as manager of the joint family and the joint family property was alone entitled to sue, and he had not done so, but had put up his minor sons, with their grandmother as next friend to sue, so as to avoid that accounting between himself and defendant No. 1 which would take place if he, defendant No. 2, sued as plaintiff. There is no doubt in our minds that this explanation is the true explanation of the action of defendant No. 2. He supports the claim of his minor sons against defendant No. 1 but he will not sue himself. Reliance was placed on behalf of the appellant-defendant No. 1 on a case of this Court in Kallianeshwar Bhagwandas v. Shewaram Nandram (1) in which it was held that the manager or karta is alone competent to represent the family, to act for it and to bind it, and a mere co-parcener cannot sue or appeal alone. Reliance was also placed upon the judgment in Ram Kishan v. Ganga Ram (2). It is true that in Kallianeshwar Bhagwandas v. Shewaram Nandram (1), this Court was considering the case of an appeal by a co-parcener who was not joined as a party to the suit and other considerations besides that of the right of a co-parcener to oust the karta or manager from authority or interfere in his management were present; but all the diligence of the learned Advocate for the respondents has not enabled him to find one case where it has been held that minor co-parceners can bring a suit with respect to joint family property in the possession of a third party without the manager or karta being himself a plaintiff. All the cases cited merely show that it was at one time considered necessary to join the other co-parceners with the manager in a suit brought by the manager, which is no longer good law: Kishan Parshad v. Har Narain Singh (3) at p. 277; but not one case is cited to us to show that minor co-parceners can, therefore, bring a suit such as this and do what, it would appear, the manager only is competent to do.

The case nearest to the argument of the learned Advocate for the respondents was Arunachala Pillai v. Vythialinga Mudaliar (4), but this case merely decided that no member of an undivided family, except the manager, as such, is entitled to bring a suit to establish a right belonging to his family without making the other members of the family parties to the suit, but that case did not decide that minor co-parceners could bring a suit for accounts of the joint ancestral property in the hands of a third party, their father, the manager, not being joined as co-plaintiff, but being joined as defendant No. 2 and supporting their claim; nor did the case decide that adult co-parceners could usurp the authority and status of the karta or manager and bring a suit in their own names separately from him. We think this case can be looked at simply and decided simply in this way: The minor plaintiffs could not give defendant No. 1 a receipt or quitance on settlement of his accounts, even should defendant No. 1 be willing to account. That could be done only by the manager, who therefore alone was entitled to call for accounts and give a quitance or receipt on settlement. If therefore the minor plaintiffs could not give defendant No. 1 a good quitance or receipt on settlement of accounts obviously they had no right to sue, the truth being as, as laid down in Kallianeshwar Bhagwandas v. Shewaram Nandram (1), it is the manager or karta who is alone competent to represent the family, to act for it and to bind it and this proposition finds support in the judgments in Alagappa Chetti v. Vellian Chetti (5) and Kishan Parshad v. Har Narain Singh (3), which emphasize the right of the manager to sue alone; but the co-parcener has no such (3) 33 A 272 at p 277; 9 Ind. Cas. 739; 381 A 45; 8 L J 256; 15 O W N 321; 9 M L T 343; 13 O L J 345; 4 M L J 378; 13 Bom. L R 359; (1911) 2 M W N 395 (4) 6 M 27.
(5) 18 M 33; 4 M L J 283.

right. We do not think the device of joining the manager as a defendant avoids the difficulty. Reference may also be made to the case in Ram Kishan v. Ganga Ram (2), where after quoting from the judgment of the Privy Council in Kishan Parshad v. Har Narain Singh (3) Dalip Singh, J. said (p. 432*):

"It seems to me to follow from the above that it is not the form in which the manager sues which determines his capacity to sue, on behalf of the joint family, but the fact that nobody except him has the right to interfere in the business of the joint Hindu family or to give a discharge or a receipt for a debt due to or from that joint family which confers the capacity on the manager."

And

"It is clear law that a son could not interfere with the father's management of the family business."

To hold otherwise would be to deprive the father of the right and power of management. This is much the effect of the ruling in Kallianeshwar Bhagwandas v. Shewaram Nandram (1). We hold, therefore, the minor co-parceners had no right to sue, and we allow the appeal and restore the order of the trial Judge with costs throughout.

LEE SHI—APPELLANT

CONSOLIDATED TIN MINES OF BURMA, LTD.—RESPONDENTS

Workmen's Compensation Act (VIII of 1923), ss. 12, 3—Principal's liability to compensate workmen employed by contractor—Wilful disobedience of workman—Liability of employer—Tests—At time of accident workman doing work for which he was employed, but having no right to go to place where he died—Employer's liability.

Section 12, Workmen's Compensation Act, shows that the principal who employs a contractor shall be liable to compensation to workmen whom he did not immediately employ but who are employed by the contractor. But before the principal is made liable, it must be established that the contractor was entitled to expect such workmen to do his work at his orders and that he was entitled to dismiss such workmen. It must be shown that there was a contract of service between the workmen and the contractor. Where there is only an agreement by which certain selected persons could come when they chose and do work on their own account which would get for them remuneration from the contractor, the principal is not liable to compensate such workmen.

Under s. 3, in spite of there being wilful disobedience on the part of the workman concerned, an employer may be liable in respect of injury which results in death provided the accident arose out of and in the course of a person's employment. In considering this question the ambit or scope of a man's employment must be looked at in relation to the contract which he has made with his employer. There is one test which is always applicable, and it is this: Was it part of the injured person's employment to hazard, to suffer, or to do that which caused his injury? If yes, the accident arose out of his employment.

In a case where the workman met with his death when he was doing the very thing which he was employed to do, the mere fact that he had no right to be working in the place where he was when he met his death, does not show that the accident did not arise out of and in course of employment and the employer would in such case be liable to compensation under s. 3.

C. Misc. A. against the order of the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation, Tavoy, dated November 3, 1938.

Mr. U. Chan Htoon, for the Appellant.

Mr. De; for the Respondents.

Roberts, C. J.—This is an appeal from the order of the learned Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation at Tavoy arising out of the death of one Chan Chi Lyan, a Chinaman, who was killed on August 24, 1937 whilst working in or about the mines of the respondent company. The cause of his death was the fall of a tree which collapsed into a drainage or ditch in which he was working, and this action is brought by his widow by her agent Ah Chan against the respondent company. The learned Commissioner framed four issues, the first being whether on the date in question the deceased was a workman employed by the respondent company, and that issue he answered in the affirmative for reasons which we find it difficult to understand. He states that his finding has been arrived at in view of the evidence of one Akbar and that at the time of his death the deceased was what is known as a tributor? We are not told in the order of the learned Commissioner what a tributor is: We are not told with whom he had a contract of service; we are not told of the nature of his work, or the place at which he was expected to work, or the wages which he earned; but we are left with the bare finding of fact that he was in the opinion of the Commissioner a workman within the statute. Akbar in his evidence says that the deceased was a tributor who during the four days before his death (which was the only period for which he had been a tributor) did not supply any ore to the company and that his name was not entered in any ledger. In cross-examination he said that contractors do not employ tributors but tributors get and sell ore to contractors and get cash from them. And his evidence was therefore to the effect, so far as I can see, that the deceased was not employed by any body but was a free agent to come and go as and when he liked for the purpose of collecting ore or doing some other ancillary work which would result in his private gain when he sold the produce to a contractor. Another witness, Mr. Rajan, who was the Assistant Officiating Manager of the respondent company, said that the contractor engaged his own labour and made his own arrangements for paying them, and the contractor was paid by the company at an agreed price per viss won. This makes it doubtful as to whether the contractor would pay merely for the ore which was given to them by the tributors or whether they were dealing with the deceased upon the footing of a servant or some one who was having a series of contracts with them.

Section 12, Workmen's Compensation Act, plainly shows that the principal who employs a contractor (that is to say, the respondent company here) shall be liable to compensation to workmen whom he did not immediately employ but who are employed by the contractor. But there is so far as I can observe, nothing in the evidence in this case which shows that the deceased ever had a contract of service with the contractor at all. Loosely speaking of course, it might be permissible to say that the coolies who collect ore and are paid by a contractor for what they collect are employed by him, but the tests of employment must be looked to. Were the contractors entitled to expect such coolies among the deceased among them, to do their work under their orders? Were they entitled to dismiss such persons? Was there in short a contract of service between them or was there merely an arrangement by which certain selected persons when they chose could come and do work on their own account which would get for them remuneration from the contractors? We have not been favoured with the result of an examination into these matters, and this case must accordingly go back to the Commissioner so that he may take evidence and record the evidence that he has taken and that we may say whether upon that evidence there is any material upon which we can find that the deceased in this case was a workman within the meaning of the statute. If he was such a workman, the next question is whether the accident which killed him arose out of or in the course of his employment, having regard to the provisions of s. 3 of the Act. And it is clear from those provisions, looking at sub-s. (1) (b) (ii), that the employer shall not be liable in respect of any injury not resulting in death caused by an accident which is directly attributable to the wilful disobedience of the workman to an order expressly given. That means to say that the first question to be faced is whether the accident arose out of and in the course of a workman's employment. If it does, the employer is prima facie liable unless there is a wilful disobedience by the workman to an order expressly given. But even though such wilful disobedience has existed, the liability occurs when the injury is found to have resulted in the workman's death. Accordingly, the Commissioner had to address himself, having found that the deceased was a workman, to the question whether this accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. This matter he has dealt with in a somewhat summary way. He said that it was clear that the deceased had no right to be working in the place where he was when he met his death, and that therefore the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. But the Statute says in plain terms that in spite of there being wilful disobedience, an employer may be liable in respect of injury which results in death provided the accident arose out of and in the course of a person's employment.

Now in considering this question, the ambit or scope of a man's employment must be looked at in relation to the contract which he has made with his employer. The first thing to be noticed is that it is quite clear that there are a number of things which a person may do whilst he is being employed which do not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Two cases assist us in this connection. In the first case, Davies v. Gwauncaegurwen Colliery (1), a workman in contravention of express orders went to hang up his coat in a place to which he had been forbidden access, and it was held that the act of hanging up his coat, though done at or close to the place of his employment, was done for his own purpose and done in a place outside the scope of his employment, and was merely an act incidental to his employment, and therefore was not an act covered by the statute. A further illustration of the same principle arose in a case to which I referred in argument, where a travelling ticket collector in the employment of the Great Western Ry. Co. was obliged during the course of his duties to remain on different occasions for a night at Swansea. Being qualified as a guard and therefore being liable to be called upon in any emergency to act as such, he was obliged to leave the address of his lodgings in Swansea with the Ry. Co.; but apart from that he was free to go to and fro wherever he chose in Swansea whilst not on duty. One morning whilst going from his lodgings to the station to join the train, he fell in the street and claimed compensation. It was held, while in the street proceeding from his lodgings to the station, he was not performing any duty under his contract of service, and therefore the accident did not arise in the course of his employment. And the whole question in this case is whether the accident which took place was one which took place owing to the nature of the person's employment and from a risk which was incident to the carrying out of his duties in that employment alone. In the case I have just cited Alderman v. G. W. Ry. Co., (2), although the appellant would never have been at Swansea but for the nature of his employment, he was whilst at Swansea acting as an ordinary member of the public. In this case, however, it seems to me that the accident which arose was one which arose—assuming the deceased to have been a workman—by reason of the fact that he was doing the very thing which he may well have been employed to do, namely to find ore, and in the course of finding ore and while doing those things which directly concerned his work, he was injured by a falling tree.

In Clarke v. Southern Railway (3) the authorities in relation to the act of a person who does something which he is forbidden to do whilst engaged in his work received careful consideration at the hands of Scrutton, L. J. In that case Clarke, who was a workman in the employ of the Southern Railway, went by a shorter route along the permanent way to his work. This was a common practice although forbidden by the company's rules. When the servant had walked some distance along the line an engine was found to be going in the same direction and he tried to mount it so as to get a lift, with the result that he was seriously injured. It was held on appeal that workmen were not any longer in their employment when they went into a definitely prohibited area and had gone outside their sphere of employment. Scrutton, L. J. said:

"Approaching this case therefore from that point of view and appreciating that it is not enough to say: 'You were forbidden to go on the line, therefore the accident cannot have arisen in the course of your employment,' what test are we to apply?"

and he applied the test laid down by Lord Sumner in the case which Mr. De has just cited to us Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway v. Highley (4) Lord Sumner said:

"There is, in my opinion, one test which is always applicable, and it is this: Was it part of the injured person's employment to hazard, to suffer, or to do that which caused his injury? If yes, the accident arose out of his employment. If nay, it did not, because what it was not part of the employment to hazard, to suffer, or to do cannot well be the cause of an accident arising out of the employment."

In this case the deceased Chan Chi Lyan was doing something which, so far as can be seen, arose from the nature of the contract of service which he had undertaken. It has been suggested that there was an added peril by reason of the fact that notwithstanding the prohibition, he went to a place which was near a dangerous tree which fell upon him; but that point has been dealt with by Lord Buckmaster in the case of Thomas v. Ocean Coal Co., Ltd. (5). Lord Buckmaster says (at p. 446*):

"In one sense, every method of performing an operation in the course of a man's employment that is not the safest is an added peril, but the Act contains no provisions that exclude from its benefits an accident that has arisen through a method of work which was not the safest in the circumstances. Conduct can of course be so reckless and so unnecessary as to take it outside the meaning of the statute."

Now, does the mere fact of an act of being a disobedient act take it outside the meaning of the statute because it must necessarily, by reason of being disobedient, be so reckless and so unnecessary that the dependent should not receive compensation? The answer is that the statute expressly deals with the matter in saying that where there is wilful disobedience, the employer shall not be liable unless—and this is the most important matter—the injury results in death. Where the injury results in death, the employer has no defence in merely saying that it was sustained as the result of the wilful disobedience of the workman to an order expressly given; and that is all that he has been able to say here. I therefore think that the Commissioner has not rightly directed himself upon this matter. But all that we have to do at the present juncture is to send the case back to him to see whether there was any evidence upon which he could hold as a fact that the deceased was a workman within the meaning of the Act. We shall have to consider when he has taken fresh evidence and reported to us his conclusion on that matter, what are the proper steps to be taken in the circumstances. Having examined the other matters, the learned Commissioner must make an effort to deal with the question of wages in case it shall transpire that the appellant is entitled to compensation. The method of calculating wages is laid down by s. 5 of the Act and must be computed in accordance with its provisions.

Dunkley, J.—I agree, and desire to add only one word. The Act provides that in the case of an injury resulting in death, it shall be no answer on the part of an employer to a claim for compensation that the deceased workman acted in wilful disobedience of an order expressly given, and it appears to me that the answer of the learned Commissioner to his third issue must have the effect of rendering this provision nugatory.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 98, s. 2—Plaintiff obtaining decree without fraud and collusion and bona fide believing person sued against to be legal representative of his deceased debtor—Other legal representatives not parties to suit, whether bound by decree—Such representatives, if judgment-debtors within meaning of O. XXI, r. 98—Order passed in their favour refusing to deliver possession to decree-holder, whether appealable as decree.

without fraud or collusion, the other proper legal representatives of the deceased debtor would be bound by it even if they were not impleaded in the suit, when the person who has been sued as a legal representative is in possession of the whole estate left by the deceased debtor. The case would be still stronger if the interest of the person who had been sued turns to be identically the same as of those who were not impleaded for want of knowledge on the part of the plaintiff. When plaintiff in such a suit obtains a decree, the legal representatives who are not impleaded in suit must be regarded as judgment-debtors within meaning of O. XXI, r. 98, Civil P. O., and an order passed in their favour refusing to deliver possession to the decree-holder is appealable as decree. 4 Ind. Cas. 1059 (3), 31 Ind. Cas. 920 (4), 52 Ind. Cas. 509 (5) and 129 Ind. Judgment.—One Srinivasulu Naidu executed a mortgage in favour of the appellant on July 3, 1921. The mortgagor died leaving him surviving a legitimate son, an illegitimate son and a concubine. The appellant instituted a suit on the basis of the mortgage after the mortgagor's death (O. S. No. 258 of 1930). He did not know of the existence of the illegitimate son and the concubine and thus impleaded the legitimate son alone who was considered by him to be the sole legal representative of the deceased mortgagor. It might be stated here that the legitimate son was in possession of the properties left by his father Srinivasulu Naidu including the house mortgaged by him. A decree was passed in favour of the appellant mortgagee on October 22, 1930. In execution of this decree the mortgagee brought the property to sale and purchased it himself some time in 1931. It seems that before the appellant had obtained the mortgage decree a suit was filed by the illegitimate son who is the respondent in this appeal (and respondent No. 1 in the trial Court) for partition and by the concubine (who is respondent No. 2 in the trial Court) for maintenance on March 7, 1930. This was decreed on April 15, 1931. A final decree was passed on February 11, 1932, under which respondent No. 1 got one-fourth share of the house mortgaged by his father and respondent No. 2 got a charge in respect of the three-fourths of the house in lieu of her maintenance.

Respondent No. 1 appears to have taken possession of the house through Court on August 18, 1932. After the purchase of the property, the appellant auction-purchaser tried to take possession through Court, but he was obstructed by respondents Nos. 1 and 2 and made an application for the removal of obstruction to the District Munsif of Trichinopoly on March 29, 1934. It was contended on behalf of respondents Nos. 1 and 2 that they were not parties to the decree and were therefore not bound by it. They also pleaded collusion between the decree-holder and the legitimate son. The executing Court's judgment is not very explicit but in the absence of evidence on the record in regard to collusion between the appellant-decree-holder and the legitimate son, it may be taken that the executing Court found against it. Holding that the concubine, i. e., respondent No. 2, was not in possession of the house, he declined to accept the objection raised on her behalf but finding that the illegitimate son, i. e., respondent No. 1, was in actual possession of one-fourth of the house on his own behalf, his objection was accepted with the result that the appellant decree-holder was ordered to be put into possession of the three-fourths of the house purchased by him but the Court declined to deliver possession to him in regard to the remaining one-fourth. The appellant decree-holder filed an appeal against that order to the District Judge of Trichinopoly who dismissed it in a very brief order on the ground that it was not competent as the order was passed by the executing Court under O. XXI, r. 97, Civil P. O. The present appeal has been filed against this order.

The narrative of facts which has been given above would show that the only question which arises for decision in this appeal is whether the illegitimate son was bound by the decree obtained by the auction-purchaser against the legitimate son in October 1930. As I have said above, there is no evidence on record that there was any collusion between the decree-holder and the legitimate son. There is nothing to show that the decree-holder knew of the existence of the illegitimate son or of the concubine before he filed a suit or obtained his decree. Moreover, the legitimate son was in possession of the whole estate left by his father at the time when the suit was instituted or even when the decree was obtained on the basis of the mortgage. It must, therefore, be held that the decree-holder's action in impleading the legitimate son, who would, in the ordinary course, be the only legal representative was bona fide. This, however, would not be enough if the general principle of law that a person is not bound by a decree to which he is not a party is held to govern the present case. If that principle be held to be applicable, there is no doubt that the order passed by the learned District Judge would be correct and the only remedy which the appellant before me would have is to file a suit and appeals either to the lower Appellate Court or to this Court would not be competent. On the other hand, if it be found that although not a party to the suit he was yet bound by the decree passed against the legitimate son as the legal representative of his father, appeals would be competent. This can only be if respondents Nos. 1 and 2 are held to be judgment-debtors within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 98, and the order refusing to deliver possession found to be appealable as a decree.

There has been some divergence of opinion between the different High Courts on this question. While the Calcutta and the Allahabad Courts appear to have taken the view that in these circumstances the person who was not impleaded as a defendant in the case would not be bound by the decree which was passed in his absence, Jagannath Prasad v. Jamuna Bai (1) and Dwipal Chandra v. Jiban Debi (2) this Court has held in a number of decisions that if the plaintiff believed bona fide that the person who was sued was the proper legal representative of his debtor and a decree was obtained against him without any fraud or collusion, the proper legal representatives would be bound by the decree even if they were not impleaded in the suit. A great deal can be said in favour of the view if one finds the person who has been sued as a legal representative happens to be in possession of the estate left by the deceased. The case would be still stronger if the interest of the person who had been sued turns to be identically the same as of those who were not impleaded for want of knowledge on the part of the plaintiff. It is impossible to say in these circumstances as to what view one would have formed if the matter were res integra. But since the matter has been decided by not one but three, i. not four, Division Benches of this Court and those decisions are binding on me it is impossible for me to go into the question de novo and find for myself whether the decree passed against the legitimate son in this case and would not be binding on the illegitimate son and the concubine, i. e. respondents Nos. 1 and 2. see Ramaswami Chettiar v. Oppilaman Chetti (3), Gnanambal Ammal v. Veerasami Chetti (4), Socrayya v. Chinna Anjaneyalu (5) and Chaturbhuj Das Kushaldoss & Sons v. Rajamanickam Mucaliar (6). It may be said in regard to the first case that the matter arose in execution and as pointed out by the learned Acting Chief Justice in Jagannath Prasad v. Jamuna Bai (1) the same principle which would apply to suits may not be held to be applicable to execution. But so far as the three other cases are concerned, they cannot be distinguished on their main facts from the present one. Following the cases decided by this Court, respondents Nos. 1 and 2 cannot be regarded as persons other than judgment-debtors within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 98, Civil P. C. This appeal must, therefore, be accepted and the order passed by the lower Appellate Court set aside. The lower Appellate Court is now directed to entertain the appeal filed by the appellant and dispose of the same in the light of my observations according to law. The appellant will have his costs in this Court. Costs in the lower Appellate Court will abide the result. Leave refused.

Execution of decree deciding rights of parties to intestate estate—Court appointing Commissioner to investigate what sums were due to estate—Whether final order—Appeal, if lies.

During the course of execution proceedings in respect of a decree passed on an award deciding rights of parties in the intestate estate of a deceased, a Commissioner was appointed to investigate the question as to what sums were due to the estate in order that the amount of that estate may be ascertained, so that the parties may be able to enjoy their respective properties in accordance with the award made:

Held, that the order was in the nature of an interlocutory order and was in no sense a final order and the appeal was not maintainable.

Harries, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur dated September 14, 1938. The facts giving rise to the appeal can be shortly stated as follows. The appellant who is in the position of a decree-holder is the daughter of the late Mr. Deep Narain Singh, who died on November 29, 1935. The respondent is the widow of the said Deep Narain Singh. Before his death the deceased executed a deed of trust setting apart extensive property for the propagation of education in Bihar subject to payment of certain annuities. He reserved to himself a monthly payment of Rs. 4,250 during his lifetime out of which Rs. 3,000 per month was to revert to the trust after his death. As to the balance of Rs. 1,250, he reserved for himself a power of disposition, and on March 6, 1931, he executed a will bequeathing Rs. 750 per month to the appellant and the remaining Rs. 500 per month to the widow for their respective lives. He left no will dealing with the remainder of his property which therefore devolved on an intestacy. After Mr. Deep Narain Singh's death disputes arose between the appellant and the respondent. The appellant claimed the intestate estate as sole heir, alleging that the respondent had never been legally married to the deceased. Eventually the daughter brought a suit to establish these allegations. The widow brought another suit, alleging that there was an agreement between the parties to refer their disputes to arbitration and prayed that the dispute should be so referred. These two suits were compromised, and it was agreed between the parties that all disputes existing between them should be referred to Dr. Rajendra Prasad as sole arbitrator.

The points which the arbitrator had to decide were: (1) What were the properties in respect of which Mr. Deep Narain Singh died intestate? (2) How were these properties to be enjoyed by the respective parties?

On August 12, 1937, Dr. Rajendra Prasad made his award in which he decided what properties formed part of the intestate estate. He further held that subject to payment of certain debts, these properties should be enjoyed half and half by the parties for their lives. The question as to who was entitled to the properties after the deaths of the parties was left to be decided in the ordinary course of law. A decree was passed in terms of this award, and eventually the appellant sought to execute the decree. During the course of this execution application questions arose as to what sums were payable to the intestate estate of Mr. Deep Narain Singh, and a Commissioner was appointed to investigate this question amongst others. After the Commissioner had been appointed, he applied to the Court on July 19, 1938, for directions on certain questions, and by the order under appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge gave the Commissioner directions upon the various points and directed the Commissioner to complete his investigation in the light of the directions which had been given. Against that order the appellant has preferred the present appeal, and a preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondent. It has been contended by Sir Manmatha Nath Mukerji who appears for the respondent that this appeal is premature and that the proper time to challenge directions given to the Commissioner is when an appeal is brought against the final order of the learned Subordinate Judge.

In my judgment, this preliminary objection is well-founded. The Commissioner has been appointed to make inquiries and to ascertain what sums are due to the intestate estate in order that the amount of that estate may be ascertained, so that the parties may be able to enjoy their respective properties in accordance with the award made by Dr. Rajendra Prasad. What the ultimate finding of the Commissioner will be, it is impossible to say. He must now act upon the instructions given to him and make his report. It appears to me that until that report has been made and the learned Judge has passed his final order, there can be no appeal. The order under appeal is in the nature of an interlocutory order and is in no sense a final order. It was argued by Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick on behalf of the appellant that this is an order made under s. 47, Civil P. O., and therefore appealable; but, in my view, this is in the nature of an interlocutory order and has no finality about it. If this order was appealable, then it appears to me that the appellant might have, during the course of these proceedings, a series of appeals before the final order was ever passed.

Sir Manmatha Nath Mukerji concedes that all the points taken by the appellant in this appeal will be open to him in an appeal against the final order; and in my view it is only when the final order has been passed that the points which the appellant proposes to argue in this appeal can be properly taken. After the final order has been passed, the whole of these questions can be agitated, and the fact that this appeal has been dismissed on the ground that it is premature will, in no way, affect the rights of the appellant. For these reasons, I hold that there is no appeal against this order and I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Fazi Ali, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109 (c)—Applicability to interlocutory orders—Leave to appeal from interlocutory order, when granted.

Clause (c) of s. 109, Civil P. O., applies even to interlocutory orders and in appropriate cases such orders can be made the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council. The mere fact that the order superseding the arbitration passed by the Court below was an interlocutory order cannot therefore be a bar to the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. But before the application can be granted, the High Court must be satisfied that the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. A case cannot be certified as a fit one for appeal on the mere ground that it raises a substantial question of law. One of the matters to be taken into consideration in this connection must invariably be whether the permission to appeal is or is not calculated to unduly delay the disposal of the substantive dispute between the parties on its merits. If the interlocutory order, the validity of which is sought to be tested by an appeal to His Majesty in Council, is one that is not calculated to prejudicially affect the right of either party to the litigation to have the substantive matters in dispute in the litigation decided by a competent Court ordinarily leave to appeal ought not to be granted. 103 Ind. Cas. 561 (2) and 147 Ind. Cas 376 (3), relied on. [p. 85, col 1.]

App. for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. G. S. Pathak and V. D. Bhargava, for the Opposite Party.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order passed by a Division Bench of this Court dismissing a civil application in revision. It is conceded that the case does not fall within the purview of cls. (a) and (b) of s. 109 and s. 110, Civil P. O., but it is maintained that in view of the provisions of cl. (c) of s. 109 the case should be certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The facts giving rise to the present application may be briefly stated as follows: Mst. Indrawati, respondent, filed a civil suit in the Court of the Civil Judge of Muttra against Rai Saheb Govind Das and certain other defendants. The value of the subject-matter of the suit was Rs. 18,00,000. The suit was for a declaration that Indrawati, plaintiff, was the next reversioner after her mother Mst. Bhagwati of the property left by her father Kalyan Singh who was alleged to be separate from Govind Das and the other members of his family. Indrawati further claimed a declaration that a deed of agreement dated October 18, 1919, entered into between her mother Mst. Bhagwati and the other members of the family of Kalyan Singh was null and void.

The defendants contested the suit and pleaded inter alia that Kalyan Singh was a member of a joint Hindu family with them and that the agreement dated October 18, 1919, was a valid and binding agreement and had been acted upon by all the partners. They maintained that the agreement was in the nature of a family settlement and was binding not only on the parties to that settlement but even on Indrawati plaintiff. They also alleged that Kalyan Singh had before his death made an oral will to the effect that the male members of his family would be the owners of the property after his death. After the issues were framed in the case the suit was transferred for trial to the Court of the Additional Civil Judge of Muttra and we are informed that the learned Judge recorded oral evidence adduced by the parties for about 10 to 11 months. During the progress of the hearing of the suit the parties agreed to refer the matter in difference between them to the arbitration of three persons, viz. (1) Rai Bahadur Ram Nath Bhargava, Muttra, (2) B. Basdeo Sahai, Vakil, Agra, and (3) B. Mathura Prasad, Rais, Sasni. They accordingly filed an application in Court on January 2, 1934, praying for an order of reference to the three gentlemen named above. In the application, the authority given to the arbitrators to summon and record evidence and to decide the dispute between the parties was specified. There was, however, no provision in the application to meet the contingency of difference of opinion amongst the arbitrators. The Court accepted the application and referred to the three arbitrators the matter in difference between the parties for decision. In making this order of reference the Court also overlooked the provisions of para. 4 of Sch II to the Civil P. O., and failed to make any provision in the reference about the appointment of an umpire or the decision of the case being according to the opinion of the majority of the arbitrators in the event of a difference of opinion among them.

The case remained pending before the arbitrators for some months and eventually on May 19, 1934, two awards were filed in Court, one signed by Rai Bahadur Ram Nath Bhargava and B. Basdeo Sahai dismissing the suit, and the other signed by B. Mathura Prasad decreeing the suit. The Court then allowed ten days' time to the parties to file objections to the awards. On May 28, the plaintiff filed an objection against the award of B. Ram Nath and B. Basdeo Sahai. By her objection she maintained inter alia that the award delivered by these two gentlemen was invalid as it was not a unanimous award. The next day, viz., on May 29, the defendants filed an objection against the award of B. Mathura Prasad. In this objection it was stated that the award signed by B. Ram Nath and B. Basdeo Sahai was in fact the unanimous award of all the arbitrators and that after that award was prepared with the consent of all the three arbitrators, Indrawati won over B. Mathura Prasad arbitrator and did not let him sign the aforesaid award and that instead she got an award filed by B. Mathura Prasad decreeing the suit. It was also alleged in the objections that as a matter of fact the parties had agreed to be bound by the decision of the majority of the arbitrators, but by an oversight and through inadvertence this fact was not mentioned in the application for reference to arbitration.

After these objections were filed, the learned Additional Civil Judge fixed May 30, 1934, for the hearing and disposal of the objections. It is needless to observe that the time allowed to the parties to substantiate their objections was too short and it may be conceded that the order fixing May 30, 1934 for the disposal of the objections was an indefensible order. The defendants alleged—and the allegation appears to be well founded—that they tried their best to produce the two arbitrators who had decided in their favour as witnesses in Court on May 30, and that their attempts were not crowned with success. They even applied on May 30, for further time being allowed to them to substantiate the allegations contained in their objections by producing the two arbitrators, but this application was disallowed by the learned Civil Judge. The Court was closed for the long vacation from June 1 to July 1, 1934, both days inclusive, and on the re-opening of the Court on July 2, the learned Judge passed an order setting aside the two awards filed by the arbitrators and superseding the arbitration. Two of the defendants, viz., Rai Saheb Govind Das and Lachhman Das, then filed an application in revision in this Court against the order dated July 2, and the revision came up for hearing before a Division Bench of this Court. A preliminary objection was raised on behalf of Indrawati to the effect that no "case" was decided by the Civil Judge within the meaning of s. 115, Civil P. O., and as such, this Court had no jurisdiction to revise the order dated July 2. There being some conflict of judicial opinion on the question raised by the preliminary objection, the Division Bench referred the question of the maintainability of the revision to a Full Bench. The Full Bench held that the Court below

"could not be considered to have decided a case within the meaning of s. 115, Civil P. O., where it has set aside the award and superseded the arbitration pending a suit which is consequently to be tried by the Court: vide Govind Das v. Indrawati (1)."

In view of this decision of the Full Bench, the Division Bench dismissed the application in revision filed by the defendants. It is from this order that the defendant-applicants propose to file an appeal to His Majesty in Council. The question sought to be raised in the proposed appeal is about the maintainability or otherwise of the application in revision that was filed in this Court, and it is urged that too narrow an interpretation has been put by the Full Bench on the word "case" used in s. 115, Civil P. O. It is stated in the application that the question to be raised in the proposed appeal is of great general and public importance, and the case is, therefore, a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council under s. 109 (c), Civil P. O.

It is clear that cl. (c) of s. 109 applies even to interlocutory orders and in appropriate cases such orders can be made the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council. The mere fact that the order superseding the arbitration passed by the Court below was an interlocutory order cannot therefore be a bar to the present application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. But before the application can be granted, this Court must be satisfied that the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. It is impossible to give an exhaustive list of cases which may be deemed, apart from the provisions of cls. (a) and (b) of s. 109 and s. 110, Civil P. C., to be fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council, but it may safely be laid down that the discretion vested in this Court by cl. (c) of s. 109 is to be sparingly exercised and that a case cannot be certified as a fit one for appeal on the mere ground that it raises a substantial question of law. One of the matters to be taken into consideration in this connection must invariably be whether the permission to appeal is or is not calculated to unduly delay the disposal of the substantive dispute between the parties on its merits. If the interlocutory order, the validity of which is sought to be tested by an appeal to His Majesty in Council, is one that is not calculated to prejudicially affect the right of either party to the litigation to have the substantive matters in dispute in the litigation decided by a competent Court ordinarily leave to appeal ought not to be granted. The scope of s. 109 (c) of the Code formed the subject of consideration by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Benoy Krishna Mukherji v. Satish

Chandra Giri (2). It was laid down by Rankin, J. in that case that "while interlocutory orders do come under s. 109 (c) Civil P. O., the mere fact of their having some public or private importance that may be taken to be the equivalent of a high money value does not give the party complaining an option to take the matter on appeal to England."

The learned Judge further laid down that "leave for such appeal should be granted only when the case involves practical considerations of a special character such as when the order complained of is oppressive or in its cumulative effect crippling."

It was further observed in that case that "ordinarily interlocutory proceedings should not be protracted by granting leave to appeal from orders passed in them inasmuch as that would make the litigation oppressively expensive and postpone the real elucidation of the facts by a trial of the suit."

In Iqbal Bahadur v. Ram Sree (3) it was observed that "in order to invite the application of s. 109 (c), Civil P. O., the case should be one which raises some question of considerable importance whether public or private for some question which is of wide public importance, even though the subject-matter in dispute cannot be reduced into actual terms of money and that a mere substantial question of law arising between the parties which would have been sufficient if the case had fulfilled the requirements of ss. 110, would obviously not be sufficient for purposes of s. 109 (c)."

Having regard to the observations made in the two cases just cited, we are not satisfied that the case before us is fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council. As stated before, a substantial portion of the oral evidence that the parties proposed to produce was recorded by the trial Judge before the application for reference to arbitration was made and all that now remains for the trial Judge to do is to record some more evidence and then proceed to hear arguments and decide the case. The supersession of the arbitration is, therefore, not calculated to involve the parties in excessive expenditure of money. Further, the omission in the application for reference to arbitration and in the order of reference passed by the Court to make any provision to meet the contingency of there being difference of opinion between the arbitrators, prima facie renders the order of reference ineffective and inoperative. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that two diametrically opposite awards were delivered by the arbitrators concerned, and that both parties were dissatisfied with the awards and preferred objections to the same. It would have been very difficult to substantiate by oral evidence the allegation that prior to the filing of the award in Court, the arbitrators had arrived at a unanimous decision, and as such, the award filed by the two arbitrators should be accepted. Again, prima facie the suit by Mst. Indrawati is more or less of a representative character and even if the suit was to terminate by an award considerable scope for further litigation by future reversioners would remain and it would not be surprising if a future reversioner in the event of the decision being against Mst. Indrawati may file a suit on the allegation that the award was the result of collusion between the parties to the suit. Be that as it may, the decision of the suit by the Court, in the situation that has arisen will be far more desirable and in the interests of the parties concerned. We therefore reject this application with costs. The stay order is discharged.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 35, 27—Ex parte order of adjudication passed on clearance day—Propriety—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX—Applicability to insolvency proceedings.

The orders and circulars issued by the High Court should be followed by the lower Courts and the Court should not hear the case ex parte, on the last clearance day and pass an order of adjudication.

Having regard to the provisions of s. 5, Pro. Insol. Act, the provisions of O. IX, Civil P. C., may perhaps be held to be applicable to insolvency proceedings. 121 Ind. Cas. 303 (1), relied on.

O. A. from original order of the District Judge, Monghyr, dated May 14, 1938.

Mr. G. P. Sahi, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. S. Ojha for Mr. S. C. Misra, for the Respondent.

Chatterji, J.—This is an appeal against an order refusing an application of creditor No. 1 to set aside an ex parte order of adjudication which was passed on April 30, 1938. The debtor having filed an application for adjudication, notices were duly served on the creditors fixing April 23, 1938, as the date of hearing. On that date creditor No. 1 appeared and filed a petition for time to file objection. His petition was allowed and the case was adjourned to April 30, 1938, for hearing when he was to file his objection, if any. On April 30 he did file his objection, but at the time when the case was actually taken up, he did not respond to repeated calls and the case was heard and disposed of ex parte. Thereafter creditor No. 1 made an application for setting aside the ex parte order of adjudication. That application was treated by the learned District Judge as an application for review and it has been dismissed. The present appeal is by creditor No. 1 against that order. A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondent on the ground that the order appealed against being an order rejecting an application for review is not appealable. The answer is that though the expression "review" has been used by the learned District Judge, the application really purported to be one under the provisions of O. IX, Civil P. C. Having regard to the provisions of s. 5, Pro. Insol. Act, the provisions of O. IX, Civil P. C. may perhaps be held to be applicable to insolvency proceedings. In Bhagwan Das v. Chuni Lal, 121 Ind. Cas. 303 (1), it was held by the Lahore High Court that the provisions of O. IX, Civil P. C., are applicable to proceedings under the Insolvency Act. The case may, however, be looked at from another point of view. Section 35, Pro. Insol. Act, gives the Court power to annul an adjudication if in the opinion of the Court it appears that the order of adjudication should not have been made. We may therefore in this appeal consider the propriety of the ex parte order of adjudication that was made on April 30, 1938. In this view the preliminary objection must be overruled.

The contention on behalf of the appellant is that April 30, 1938, being the last Saturday, was a clearance day, and under the circular of the High Court which lays down that no cases should be heard except part-heard Sessions cases and other urgent criminal work, the Court should not have heard the case ex parte on that day. The learned District Judge in his order remarks that April 30 was definitely fixed for hearing and the objector had no excuse for not appearing when the case was called on; but it appears from the order-sheet that the case was fixed for hearing in the usual course. Indeed the objector did file his objection on that date and when that was the date fixed for hearing, he should have waited, but there may be some justification for his leaving the Court-room as it was a clearance day on which judicial work was presumed not to be done. In my opinion the orders and circulars issued by the High Court should be followed by the lower Courts and although I think there was some negligence on the part of the objector, the Court should not have heard the case ex parte on the last clearance day. In this view I would allow the appeal, set aside the ex parte order of adjudication and direct that the case be disposed of according to law. In the circumstances, there will be no order for costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 139, s. 28—Lease expiring but tenant continuing in possession without paying rent—Possession not shown to be with landlord's assent—Landlord's suit beyond 12 years after expiry held barred, irrespective of effect of s. 116, Evidence Act (I of 1873)—Evidence Act (I of 1873), s. 34—Mere entries in book account unsupported by corroborative evidence, whether sufficient to charge person—Second appeal—Finding of fact based on misconception of nature of contract—High Court, if can be addressed on facts.

After the period of lease has expired, the relationship of landlord and tenant ceases and the tenant becomes a trespasser by the operation of sub-cl. (a) of s. 111, T. P. Act. 146 Ind. Cas. 815 (1), 149 Ind. Cas. 948 (2) and 120 Ind. Cas. 186 (3), relied on [p. 860, col. 1].

Where although the lessee remained in possession after the expiry of the lease, without paying rent, there was nothing to show that the landlord assented to the lessee continuing in possession so as to enable the Court to find under the provisions of s. 116, T. P. Act, that lessee had been holding over:

Held, that the landlord's suit for possession beyond 12 years from expiry of lease must be deemed to be barred by time, irrespective of any denial by the tenant of the landlord's title and under s. 28, Lim. Act, his right to the property extinguished.

[Case-law relied on.]

Under s. 31, Evi. Act, bahi entries are evidence, but mere entries in a book account are insufficient to charge a person. It is necessary that there should be corroborative evidence to prove the payment of specific sums. [p. 859, col. 2.]

Where the finding of fact on question of non-payment of rent was itself based on an obvious misconception of the nature of the contract between the parties:

S. A. from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, dated November 4, 1938.

Mr. Fakir Chand Mittal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Qabul Chand Mittal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal from an appellate decision of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge, who had decreed the plaintiff's claim for rent and ejectment of the defendants. The material facts are that by a mortgage deed dated December 18, 1919, the house in suit was mortgaged with possession by two brothers Ibban and Kura in favour of Banwari Lal, plaintiff, for Rs. 1,200 with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem. It was stipulated that realizations on the property by way of rent were to be credited towards interest of the mortgage. On the same date, Banwari Lal, the mortgagee, by a lease deed, leased this house to the mortgagors Ibban and Kura as tenants on a rental of Rs. 2 per mensem for one year, that is, up to December 17, 1920. The suit was instituted on July 2, 1937, by Banwari Lal against Kura and Mst. Hussaini, widow of Ibban (who had died in the interval) for ejectment and for recovery of Rs. 24 as rent for the year commencing from December 18, 1935. In his pleas Kura pleaded ignorance of the mortgage deed and lease deed, dated December 18, 1919, without any denial or explanation, except the bare allegation that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover rent. Subsequently, it was also pleaded on his behalf that the suit is barred by time. On these pleadings four issues were framed as follows:—

"1. Whether defendant No. 2 and Ibban, deceased, took the house in dispute on rent and executed the rent deed dated December 18, 1919? 2. What rent was agreed upon and what rent is due? 3. Whether the suit is within time and the plaintiff can sue on the rent deed dated December 18, 1919? 4. Whether the relationship of landlord and tenant has ceased between the parties?"

The trial Court found that the defendants had been paying rent from time to time after the expiry of the tenancy and that the suit is within time. The Senior Subordinate Judge in appeal held that there had been no payment of rent for 12 years before the institution of the suit. He then proceeded to reverse the decision and dismissed the suit for reasons which are confused and not easy to understand. The execution of the mortgage deed and of the lease deed are admitted in second appeal. Counsel for the appellant in arguments sought to contest the finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court (viz. that there had been no payment of rent for 12 years before the institution of the suit), on the ground that it is based on an obvious misconception of the agreement between the parties. In his ground of appeal No. 1, he has urged that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is confused and superficial; and indeed the main difficulty in dealing with this second appeal has been caused by the unsatisfactory judgment of the lower Appellate Court. Respondents' Counsel himself, while seeking to support the finding of the lower Court that there had been no payment of rent within 12 years of the institution of the suit, conceded that he could not support the rest of the lower Appellate Court's judgment but urged that the decision to dismiss the suit can be supported on the short ground that the claim of the plaintiff is time-barred under Art. 139, Lim. Act.

The confusion into which the lower Appellate Court has fallen is indicated in the first place by the fact that in referring to Art. 139, Lim. Act, the Senior Subordinate Judge seems to think that the period of limitation therein prescribed is three years, whereas it is in fact twelve. Secondly, the lower Appellate Court apparently assumed that in this case non-payment of rent is coupled with a denial of the landlord's right to receive rent, from which the Senior Subordinate Judge proceeds to draw a legal inference that the landlord has transferred his right to the tenants. Actually, there was no clear denial of the landlord's title nor is there any question in this case of the landlord transferring his right to the tenants. Lastly, the finding of fact on the question of non-payment of rent by the Senior Subordinate Judge is itself based on an obvious misconception of the nature of the mortgage contract between the parties. The Senior Subordinate Judge in this connection refers to the evidence of P. W. No. 5 that on one occasion Rs. 9 had been received by the plaintiff towards rent. He disbelieves this evidence because the payment is shown as credited to interest and not to rent in the plaintiff's account book, thereby overlooking the stipulation in the mortgage deed, that realization by way of rent were to be credited to the interest on the mortgage.

In view of these misconceptions, I permitted Counsel to address me on the facts as well as on the law; but it soon became apparent in the course of arguments that the decision of fact, viz., that there had been no payment of rent within 12 years of the institution of the suit, is correct and clearly supported by the evidence, and that the misconception under which the lower Appellate Court laboured as the result of the crediting of the rent to interest account, was immaterial. The trial Court in this connection refers to a number of statements by witnesses, P. Ws. Nos. 5, 7, 8 and 9, who depose to the payment of certain sums by way of rent to the plaintiff at various times and held in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that those witnesses supported the entries in the plaintiff's account book of which transliteration had been filed. It is noticeable that except for the plaintiff's own statement the payments referred to by the other witnesses referred to dates before the period in suit that is during the period between 1920 and 1936 for which no claim is made. The object of this evidence was apparently merely to attract the provisions of Art. 139, Lim. Act; but there is no corroborative evidence to prove payment within the period in suit, except the bare statement of the plaintiff that he produced the transliteration of his bahi. No doubt, under s. 34, Evi. Act, these bahi entries are evidence, but mere entries in a book account are insufficient to charge the defendant. It is necessary that there should be corroborative evidence to prove the payment of specific sums and there is no such corroborative evidence relating to payments during the period in suit. Moreover, such corroborative evidence, as has been called for the previous period, is patently unconvincing; and I have no hesitation in concurring with the finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court that no payment of rent is proved either for the period in suit or for 12 years prior to the institution of the suit.

Thus for the purposes of this second appeal, it is established that while the defendant-respondents did mortgage the house in suit to the plaintiff on December 18, 1919, and on the same date re-entered into possession as tenants under the mortgagee for one year only, no rent has in fact been paid by them since 1920. Secondly, in resisting this claim, the defendants did not deny the landlord's title but merely pleaded ignorance. Thirdly, although the defendants as lessees appear to have remained in possession of the property after 1920, there is nothing to show that the plaintiff-landlord assented to the defendants continuing in possession after 1920 so as to enable the Court to find under the provisions of s. 116, T. P. Act, that defendants have been holding over. The decision of this second appeal will turn on the law applicable to these facts and considerations. In regard to this last point, there are authorities of the Lahore High Court to the effect that after the period of lease has expired, the relationship of landlord and tenant ceases and the defendant becomes a trespasser by the operation of sub-cl. (a) of s. 111, T. P. Act: see Ubedul Rahman v. Darbari Lal (1), Kirath Singh v. Kalu Singh (2) and Asa Ram v. Kishan Chand (3) all Division Bench rulings.

Counsel for the appellant contends that, while it is admitted that the lease expired in 1920, the tenancy could not have determined till the possession was restored, or the title of landlord denied. In these circumstances he urges that under s. 109, Evi. Act, the presumption is that the relationship of the landlord and tenant continued; and that under s. 116, Evi. Act, the defendants are estopped from denying the plaintiff's claim and that the plaintiff is therefore entitled to a decree. For the respondents, Mr. Qabul Chand relies on Art. 139, Lim. Act, read with s. 28, Lim. Act, from which it would follow that, because the plaintiff has not sued within the period allowed by law, his right to the property is extinguished. He urges that since 1920 the position of the defendants has been that of mere trespassers and that inasmuch as the suit has not been brought within the 12 years provided by Art. 139, the presumption under s. 109, Evi. Act, and the question of estoppel under s. 116, Evi. Act, do not arise. While conceding that had the suit been brought within 12 years of 1920, the defendants might have been estopped by s. 116, Evi. Act, from denying the plaintiff's title, he urges that the fact that the suit has not been brought within 12 years requires that the claim should be dismissed irrespective of any denial, simply because the plaintiff's right in the property has been extinguished.

Although no decision of the Lahore High Court applicable to these facts has been cited before me at the Bar, Mr. Qabul Chand has cited ample authority from the Bombay, Madras and Allahabad High Courts to prove that in these circumstances the claim must be held barred by the provisions of Art. 139, Lim. Act. The authorities cited by Mr. Qabul Chand which appear to me to be on all fours with the facts of this case, are Purshottam Yeshwant v. Vishnu Gorathe (4), a Division Bench ruling, which followed Chandri v. Daji (5) and Bhagwan Ramanuj v. Ramkrishna Bose (6). These authorities, as also Bisheshar Nath v. Kundan (7), are conceded by Counsel for the appellant to be against him. But he relies on Bilas Kunwar v. Des Raj Ranjit Singh (8) and Makhan Singh v. Baisakhi Ram Shah (9), for the proposition, that, by reason of the provisions of ss. 109 and 116, Evi. Act, the defendants are estopped from denying the plaintiff's title. No doubt such was the decision in those two rulings but neither of these authorities referred to the effect of Art. 139, Lim. Act. In fact, it would seem that in both, Bilas Kunwar v. Des Raj Ranjit Singh (8) and Makhan Singh v. Baisakhi Ram Shah (9) the application of Art. 139 could not have arisen because the suit in each case had been filed within twelve years of the determination of the period of tenancy. Bilas Kunwar v. Des Raj Ranjit Singh (8), is specifically distinguished, explained and not followed on this ground in Bisheshar Nath v. Kundan (7), which clearly lays down that, where a suit is governed by Art. 139, Lim. Act, the claim must be dismissed irrespective of the effect of s. 116, Evi. Act. In approving Chandri v. Daji (5), and in distinguishing the applicability of the ruling of the Privy Council in Bilas Kunwar v. Des Raj Ranjit Singh (8), Stuart, J., one of the Division Bench which decided Bisheshar Nath v. Kundan (7), observed as follows on p. 586* :

"It only remains to be seen whether there is anything in the Privy Council decision which can be invoked to overrule the decision of Jenkins, O. J. (that is Chandri v. Daji (5)). Their Lordships of the Privy Council say: 'A tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlords' title, however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord.' That clearly is the law, but does it in any way affect the present case? I think it does not. The defendants cannot be permitted to deny the plaintiff's title. They have foolishly denied it but they cannot be permitted to do so. The plaintiff is undoubtedly the landholder and the defendants are tenants by sufferance, but once having recognized that the tenants are so estopped, the fact still remains that the suit has been instituted beyond the period of limitation allowed by the law."

It is thus clear that in all the authorities cited before me, at the Bar by Mr. Qabul Chand in which the effect of Art. 139, Lim. Act, has been considered, it has been held that the claim must be dismissed as time-barred irrespective of any denial by the tenant of the landlord's title. In none of the rulings supported by Mr. Fakir Chand Mittal for the appellant has the effect of Art. 139 been considered; and indeed in many of them it is apparent that the suits in question were brought within the period of limitation covered by Art. 139. In these circumstances I hold that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to bring his suit within twelve years of the determination of the lease and since he has failed to do so, his claim is barred by Art. 139, Lim. Act, so that under s. 28, Lim. Act, his right to the property is extinguished. I therefore maintain the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), s. 4 (1), (7)—Proprietors of mahal having voice in appointment of lambardar or patwari are co-sharers and not petty proprietors.

Such proprietors of a mahal who have a voice in the appointment of a lambardar or of a patwari do take part in the administration of the affairs of the mahal. The vendees who have a voice in the appointment of the patwari and the lambardar of mahal cannot, therefore, be regarded "petty proprietors" as defined by the Agra Pre-emption Act and they must, therefore, be held to be co-sharers as defined by the Act. [p. 865, col. 2.]

F. As. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Agra, dated March 26, 1935.

Messrs. S. K. Dar and J. Swarup, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Respondents.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—This and the connected First Appeal No. 381 of 1935 arise out of two rival pre-emption suits filed in the Court of the Civil Judge of Agra. Both the suits were disposed of by Mr. Raghnath Prasad Trivedi by one judgment and we also propose to decide the two appeals by one judgment. The sale deed sought to be pre-empted was executed on October 9, 1933, by one Shib Sahai in favour of Chiranjil Lal and his four brothers. One of the brothers of Chiranjil Lal is a man named Mangalia Ram. The following four items of property were conveyed by the sale deed: (1) Share in village Jagner Panwar, Mahal Shib Sahai; (2) Share in village Bhawanpura, Mahal Shib Sahai; (3) A decree for arrears of rent for Rs. 125; and (4) arrears of rent of the zamindari share sold with respect to 1312 Fasil.

The consideration entered in the sale deed was a sum of Rs. 8,000. The sale deed was registered on November 24, 1933. On November 14, 1934, Bohra Chheda Lal, who is respondent in First Appeal No. 330, filed a suit for pre-emption (Suit No. 71 of 1934). He claimed pre-emption with respect to the first two items of properties conveyed by the sale deed. He based his right of pre-emption on the allegation that he was a co-sharer in Mahal Chheda Lal in both the villages sold and that the vendees were total strangers. He alleged that the real sale consideration was only Rs. 6,000 and that out of that amount Rs. 500 was the consideration for the transfer of items Nos. 3 and 4 set out above. He accordingly prayed for a decree for pre-emption with respect to items Nos. 1 and 2 of the property sold on payment of Rs. 5,500.

On November 24, 1934, Bohra Shib Singh and his two brothers who are appellants in First Appeal No. 381 of 1935 filed a rival pre-emption suit (Suit No. 12 of 1934). These plaintiffs claimed pre-emption only with respect to item No. 1 of the property conveyed by the sale deed. Their case was that they were co-sharers in Mahal Sukh Lal and Mahal Sukhdeo in village Jagner Brahmanan, and as such, had a preferential right of pre-emption as against the vendees who were strangers to the village. Their case as regards the sale consideration was that only Rs. 6,000 was the real consideration and that out of that amount a sum of Rs. 625 ought to be deducted on account of the consideration of Items Nos. 3 and 4. On these allegations they prayed for a decree for pre-emption with respect to item No. 1 on payment of proportionate price.

The vendees contested both the suits. They alleged that they had made the purchase, in question after the refusal by the plaintiffs of both the suits to purchase the properties in dispute. In support of this contention, the vendees adduced some oral evidence. That evidence was, however, not accepted by the learned Judge of the Court below with the result that this contention of the vendees was overruled. We have read the evidence of the witnesses examined by the vendees on the point and we are satisfied that the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of the Court below is correct. Mangalia Ram, one of the vendees, stated that Ohheda Lal and Shib Singh had actively taken interest in getting the price of the zamindari in suit settled and that both of them refused to purchase the property. Mangalia Ram was a highly interested witness and his evidence could not be relied upon. Two witnesses, named Pearey Lal and Shib Sahai, were produced by the vendees as regards this part of the case, and their evidence has also for convincing reasons been rejected by the learned Judge of the Court below.

Both Ohheda Lal and Shib Singh denied that they were asked to purchase the property. No notice as required by the Agra Pre-emption Act was, before the sale in favour of the vendees, given to the plaintiffs of either of the suits. The finding of the Court below that the plaintiffs of neither suit were estopped from maintaining the suits was, therefore, correct.

Before we mention the other controversial points in the case, it would be convenient to deal with the question of sale consideration. The Court below held that the entire consideration, viz., Rs. 8,000 entered in the sale deed, was paid to the vendors and that out of this amount a sum of Rs. 131-4-0 was the consideration for the transfer of the rent decree and a sum of Rs. 301-5-6 was the consideration for the transfer of the arrears of rent for 1340 Fasli. It therefore concluded that the consideration of the first two items of properties sold was Rs. 7,567-6-6. To this he added a sum of Rs. 200 on account of the costs of execution and registration of the sale deed which was incurred by the vendees and as a result he held that the consideration for the transfer of the two items of the zamindari property was Rs. 7,767-6-6. No exception can be taken to this finding of the learned Judge which is amply borne out from the materials upon the record. The learned Judge also worked out the proportionate price of the two items of the zamindari property and the Counsel for the parties are agreed that the proportionate price of item No. 1, viz., share in Mahal Shib Sahai of village Jagner Panwar, is Rs. 5,515-0-6 and the proportionate price attributable to the share in Mahal Shib Sahai of village Bhawanpura is Rs. 2,252-6-0. The learned Counsel for the vendees in the two appeals contended that in calculating the profits of the two items of the zamindari properties with a view to ascertain their respective values, the learned Judge omitted to take into account the sawai income of Mahal Shib Sahai of village Bhawanpura. We are unable to give effect to this contention. It may be that in some year there may have been some sawai income, but there was not sufficient material upon the record to justify the conclusion that in the year 1933, when the sale deed was executed, there was any sawai income in the mahal in question. The finding of the learned Judge on the question of consideration must therefore be accepted.

The main controversy in the Court below centred round the question whether or not the plaintiffs of either suit were entitled to a decree for pre-emption as regards item No. 1, viz., the share in Mahal Shib Sahai of village Jagner Panwar. The vendees contested the plaintiff's claim as regards this item of property on two grounds. Firstly they alleged that they themselves were co-sharers in Mahal Ohheda Lal of village Jagner Panwar, and as such, the plaintiff of either suit had not a preferential right as against them. Secondly, they contended that a portion of the area of Jagner Panwar sold to them was part of town area and the plaintiffs had no right to pre-empt the same. They went on to allege that there was no custom of pre-emption applicable to the land within the ambit of the town area.

The Court below held that the vendees were mere petty proprietors in Mahal Ohheda Lal of village Jagner and were not co-sharers in the same, and, as such, Bohra Ohheda Lal who was a co-sharer in village Jagner had a preferential right of pre-emption as regards Item No. 1. The Court below also held that Ohheda Lal being a co-sharer in village Bhawanpura had a right of pre-emption. As a result of these findings the Court below passed a decree in favour of Chheda Lal with respect to the first two items of zamindari property conveyed by the sale deed on payment of a sum of Rs. 7,767-0-6 within a certain time. The suit filed by Shib Singh and his brothers was contested by the vendees inter alia on the ground that they (the plaintiffs) were not co-sharers in village Jagner Panwar and that they were co-sharers in a totally different village. Shib Singh and his brothers on the other hand maintained that village Jagner Brahmanan was a part of village Jagner Panwar. The Court below held that village Jagner Brahmanan was a village different from village Jagner Panwar and on this ground dismissed the claim of Shib Singh and his brothers with the result that First Appeal No. 381 of 1935 has been filed by them.

At the hearing of these appeals it was stated that Chheda Lal after depositing the purchase money in Court and taking possession over Items Nos. 1 and 2 of the properties, sold the same to Shib Singh during the pendency of this appeal. Chheda Lal is therefore no longer interested in opposing First Appeal No. 330 that has been filed by the vendees. Shib Singh has, however, contested the appeal filed by the vendees. In order to decide the question whether the vendees are or are not co-sharers in Mahal Chheda Lal of village Jagner Panwar, it is necessary to state certain facts and in particular to briefly set out the constitution of the village as disclosed by documentary evidence. It is admitted that on May 7, 1928, one Mst. Sundar executed a sale deed with respect to a plot of land measuring 2 bighas, 15 biswas in favour of Ram Lal, the father of the vendees. This plot was then situated in village Jagner Panwar, Mahal Guman Kunwar. In the sale deed Mst. Sundar described herself as the owner and haqqivatdar of the plot and it was mentioned in the sale deed that the plot was assessed to a revenue of Rs. 2.

It is also common ground that on April 10, 1930, one Lalla Ram for self and as guardian of Shyama, minor, sold an area of 1 bigha, 8 biswas in Mahal Guman Kunwar to the vendees. In the sale deed the vendors described themselves as owners and haqqivatdars of the land sold.

The vendors of both the sale deeds were mentioned in the revenue papers as malik farottar, i. e. under-proprietors. On the basis of these purchases, the vendees maintained that they had become co-sharers in village Jagner, and as such, the plaintiffs of the two suits had not a preferential right of pre-emption against them. The learned Judge of the Court below, as already stated, held that the vendees by these purchases became owners of specific plots and their position was that of petty proprietors as defined by the Agra Pre-emption Act. The earliest document that is upon the record with respect to village Jagner Panwar is the wajib-ul-arz of 1819. This wajib-ul-arz was prepared at a time when the Land Revenue Act of 1873 (Act XIX of 1873) was in force. By the rules that were framed by the Board of Revenue under the Act, the wajib-ul-arzes to be prepared by Settlement Officers were to consist of four chapters. In Chap. I the constitution of the mahal and tenure had to be mentioned. Chap. II was to deal with "the rights of sharers among themselves, founded on a custom or agreement." Chap. III was to be reserved for entries relating to the "rights of subordinate holders." Chap. IV was with respect to the "rights of tenants." Appropriate sub-headings under each chapter were provided for by the rules and the wajib-ul-arz of 1879 that is before us faithfully follows the rules framed by the Board of Revenue as regards the preparation of wajib-ul-arz. In para. 1 of Chap. I of this wajib-ul-arz it is mentioned that "this village is in the form of imperfect pattidari tenure divided into two pattis" Para. 2 of Chap. I prescribes about the "mode of realization and payment of Govt revenue," and it is stated in this paragraph that the Govt. revenue is to be deposited in the Govt. Treasury in certain instalments "through the lambar-dar." Para. 3 deals with the custom regarding the appointment of patwari and the following provision is made in that paragraph :

"... A new patwari shall be appointed with the consent of the samindars of the circle, and in case of the difference of opinion among them, the appointment shall be made according to the opinion of those who have larger shares of property"

Paragraph 2, Chap. II, makes provision about the appointment of lambar-dars and lays down inter alia that "a new lambar-dar shall be appointed with the consent of the samindars and in case of difference of opinion, he will be appointed according to the opinion of those who have a large share of the property"

In Chap. III, para. 2 deals with "persons in possession of resumed muafi land." A long list of the resumed muafi holders together with the area of the land in their possession is given under that paragraph and it is common ground that the two purchases made of the specific plots of land by the vendees in the years 1928 and 1930 were from some resumed muafi holders specified in this list. It appears that till the year 1898 village Jagner consisted of two mahals, viz. Mahal Panwar and Mahal Brahmanan. In the year 1898 Mahal Panwar was further sub-divided into six mahals, and one of the newly-formed mahals was Mahal Guman Kunwar, in which the plots purchased by the vendees were situated. The proceedings for partition are printed at p. 36 of First Appeal No 330. The khewat of Mahal Guman Kunwar for the year 1912 is upon the record. A reference to this khewat shows that village Jagner was a bigha dham village and in the khewat the area in possession of various proprietors was specified. The khalsa land in possession of Mst Guman Kunwar was recorded as 1023 bighas 17 biswas, 10 biswansis and the revenue and the cesses payable with respect to this area were entered in the column of revenue and cesses. Thereafter the area in possession of the various inferior proprietors was detailed in the khewat and so were the revenue and cesses payable by the inferior proprietors. After these entries the total revenue in respect of the mahal was entered at the foot of the khewat. It is clear that the purchases made by the vendees in the years 1928 and 1930 were from two of the persons entered as inferior proprietors in this khewat.

Lastly, we find that in the year 1930 there were again fresh proceedings for partition of Mahal Guman Kunwar and on this occasion Mahal Guman Kunwar was sub-divided into two mahals called Mahal Shib Sahai and Mahal Ohheda Lal. It is to be noted that the share in Jagner sought to be pre-empted is situated in Mahal Shib Sahai and Ohheda Lal, plaintiff, owns a share in Mahal Chheda Lal and the specific plots purchased by the vendees in 1928 and 1930 are also situated in the same mahal. The answer to the question whether or not the vendees have become co-sharers in Mahal Ohheda Lal by virtue of the purchases made by them depends on the answer to the question whether or not they can be regarded as co-sharers as defined by the Agra Pre-emption Act. Section 4 (1) of the Act provides that "co-sharer" means "any person, other than a petty proprietor entitled as proprietor to any share or part in a mahal or village....."

"Petty proprietor" is defined by s. 4 (7) as meaning

"the proprietor of a specific plot of land in a mahal, who, as such, is not entitled to any interest in the joint lands of the mahal, or to take part in the administration of its affairs."

The fact that the vendees are proprietors of the specific plots of land in Mahal Ohheda Lal admits of no doubt and they must, therefore, be taken to be "petty proprietors" unless they are entitled to any interest in the joint lands of the mahal or are entitled to take part in the administration of the affairs of the mahal. The evidence in the case shows that the vendees fulfilled both the conditions just set out. One of the witnesses examined by Shib Singh, plaintiff, was Sri Chand, the patwari of village Jagner Panwar. He deposed that "there is a small stone hill in village Jagner Panwar. Chiranjil Lal also takes stone from the same. All proprietors of the inferior interest as well as the tenants of the village take stones from the hill. If the inferior interest holder has any waste land or tank, etc., in his patti, he uses it just as the full co-sharers of a patti use theirs"

It appears from this evidence that the vendees as owners of the specific plots purchased by them took stones from the hill which was joint undivided property in the village, and thus there is no escape from the conclusion that they had an interest in the joint lands of the mahal. It is to be noted that this admission was made by one of the plaintiff's witnesses. Mangalia Ram vendee also deposed that "all the vendees have share in the shamlati items, i. e. tanks, waste land, etc., of Jagner Panwar. We take stones from the hills of this village as samindars."

In cross-examination he stated:

"I have a share in hills, rivers, weighment dues of the village. I have share in the waste land and abadi of the village."

To the same effect is the evidence of another witness produced by the vendees, named Shib Sahai. Chheda Lal, plaintiff, in his evidence made no statement on the point contrary to the statement of Mangalia Ram and Shib Sahai. The evidence on the point is all the one way and is in favour of the vendees and shows that the owners of specific plots of resumed muafi have an interest in the joint lands of the mahal. That they also have a voice in the administration of the affairs of the mahal is put beyond doubt by the documentary evidence in the case. But, before we refer to that evidence, we propose to deal with the question as to what does the phrase "administration of the affairs of the mahal" connote. A lambardar is appointed in each mahal, and he is in certain respect the agent of all the co-sharers of the mahal. He is subject to the custom governing particular mahal, charged with the duty of looking after matters connected with the administration of the mahal. Similarly, a patwari is charged with the duty of maintaining the Record of Rights with respect to the mahal of which he is the patwari. A lambardar and a patwari, therefore, are concerned with the affairs of a mahal. It may, therefore, be safely laid down that such proprietors of a mahal who have a voice in the appointment of a lambardar or of a patwari do take part in the administration of the affairs of the mahal and in the present case we find from the evidence that the vendees had a voice in the appointment of the patwari and the lambardar of Mahal Ohheda Lal.

In the application that was filed in the year 1937 for partition of Mahal Panwar all the owners of the resumed muafi plots were arrayed as opposite parties and were described as co-sharers in village Jagner. Similarly in the partition suit of 1930 the present vendees, who had by that time become owners of specific plots of resumed muafi in Mahal Ohheda Lal, and the other owners of resumed muafi plots were arrayed as parties and described as co-sharers. This shows that no differentiation was made by the co-sharers of the village as between owners of khalsa land and owners of resumed muafi plots and that both were put on the same footing and treated as co-sharers in the village. The provision in the wajib-ul-arz of 1879 about the appointment of patwari and lambardar does give to the owners of resumed muafi plots a voice in their appointment. It is worthy of note that the relevant paragraphs in the wajib-ul-arz give the right of nomination of patwari and lambardar not to co-sharers (hissadars) but to zamindars of the village. The fact that the owner of a resumed muafi plot is a zamindar admits of no doubt. In short, the resumed muafi holders are entitled to take part in the administration of the affairs of the mahal.

Lastly, we find from the khewat of 1930 that in "mahal non applicant for partition" which was one of the mahals formed out of the original Mahal Panwar, one Gokul Prasad who was the owner of a resumed muafi plot and was described in the khewat as inferior proprietor, was appointed lambardar of the mahal. A lambardar is defined by s. 4 (3), Land Revenue Act (Act III of 1901) as meaning "a co-sharer of a mahal appointed under this Act to represent all or any of the co-sharers in that mahal." The appointment of Gokul Prasad as lambardar clearly shows that he was regarded as a co-sharer in the mahal for the simple reason that none but a co-sharer can be appointed a lambardar. As against all this documentary evidence, there is practically no evidence worth the name, on behalf of the plaintiff and the conclusion is, therefore, irresistible that the "inferior proprietors" were entitled to take part in the administration of the affairs of the mahal. They cannot, therefore, be regarded "petty proprietors" as defined by the Agra Pre-emption Act and they must, therefore, be held to be co-sharers as defined by the Act. That being so, the vendees were also co-sharers in village Jagner and Ohheda Lal had therefore no right of pre-emption as against the vendees. On this very ground the claim of Shib Singh and his brothers as against the vendees must also fail and their claim was, therefore, rightly dismissed by the Court below.

In the view that we take, it is unnecessary to consider the plea raised by the vendees based on the fact of the inclusion of a portion of Jagner in town area.

The result is that First Appeal No. 330 of 1935 must succeed as regards the share in village Jagner. We accordingly allow First Appeal No. 330 to this extent that we dismiss the plaintiff's claim as regards the share in village Jagner Panwar Mahal Shib Sahai. The decree passed by the Court below in favour of Ohheda Lal as regards the share in village Bhawanpura shall stand. The plaintiff of First Appeal No. 330 will be liable to pay on account of Bhawanpura share to the vendees a sum of Rs. 2,252-6-0 and for this we allow two months from today's date. In default of payment of the amount within the time allowed, the suit shall stand dismissed. As the victory has been divided, we direct the parties in First Appeal No. 330 of 1935 to bear their own costs in both the Courts. We dismiss First Appeal No. 381 of 1935 with costs.

DURGA CHARAN MITRA AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Administration—Letters of administration with will annexed obtained by person—Presumption that all legacies have not been paid—Mortgage by legatees of immovable property before obtaining assent of executor—Validity—Residue, how ascertained—Transferees in possession of property—Remedy of legatee to recover his specific share—Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), ss. 332, 335 (2)—Executor, if can give assent to legacy before obtaining probate of will—Mortgage executed by executor in his individual capacity as legatee—Money applied for his own use—Inference as to assent to legacy.

The mere fact that a person has obtained letters of administration with will annexed is no evidence to prove that the estate must be assumed to have been still unadministered nor that the Court should presume that all the legacies or at least the legacy in favour of such person has not been paid in accordance with the tenor of the will. 42 Ind. Cas. 233 (1) and 176 Ind. Cas. 200 (2), relied on. [p. 868, col. 1.]

Where a legatee under a will mortgages an immovable property left to him by the testator before obtaining the assent of the executor to the legacy, the property can form the subject-matter of a valid mortgage, and the mortgagee is entitled to cut off the equity of redemption. The reason for the rule is that although the legatees have no property in the legacies by the devise until the assent of the executor is obtained, they have an interest in them which is capable of being transferred. In other words, though on the assent of the executor, the full title passes to the legatee, the assent creates no new title; it merely perfects the title acquired under the will. 71 Ind. Cas. 314 (4), relied on. [p. 868, col. 2.]

There is no residue of personal estate until after payment of the debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and all costs of the administration of the estate of the testator. Therefore until the costs are paid, the net residue cannot be arrived at, at all. Trethewy v. Helyar (7) and The King v. Commissioners for the special purposes of the Income Tax Acts (8), relied on. [p. 869, col. 1.]

If the testator left no other property than the property in suit, it is always open to the legatee to recover his specific legacy, if he brings an appropriate action and there is no other obstacle by way of limitation or otherwise in his way, by suing for the amount from the persons in possession of the property of the testator as transferees. The transferees of the residuary legatee or the residuary legatees are always liable to have the property in their possession reduced to a proper extent in order to repay the specific legatees. 71 Ind. Cas. 314 (4), relied on. [p. 869, col. 2; p. 870, col. 1.]

The estate of the testator vests in the executor, if he accepts office, from the date of the testator's death, and he has the powers of an executor, under the Probate and Administration Act, even though probate has not been obtained. The executor, therefore, has power to give assent as an executor before he obtains the probate of the will. 136 Ind. Cas. 111 (9), relied on. Satya Prasad Pal v. Motilal Pal (10) held overruled. [p. 869, col. 2.]

Where the executor executes a mortgage in his individual capacity as a legatee with respect to the properties bequeathed to him and applies the money to his own use, and not to administer the estate of his testator. The executor assents to the legacy in his own favour on the date he gives the mortgage. [p. 869, cols. 1 & 2.]

A. from the original decree of the Sub-Judge, Deoghar, dated March 31, 1937.

Messrs. P. R. Das and S. Mustafi, for the Respondents.

Manohar Lall, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against a decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Deoghar dismissing the suit of the plaintiff which was instituted by her as a person to whom letters of administration were granted, for recovery of possession of the properties in suit belonging to the estate of the testator (who left a legacy in her favour) which passed to the possession of the respondent in the circumstances narrated below. The case of the plaintiff very briefly stated is this. One Gopal Chandra Chatterji had three sons, namely (1) Kali Prasanna Chatterji, (2) Siva Prasanna Chatterji and (3) Sarda Prasad Chatterji who died leaving the plaintiff as his widow and one Ganesh Chandra Chatterji as their son. Some time before 1923, Siva Prasanna Chatterji, after the death of his father, executed a will regarding his property in favour of his nephew Ganesh Chandra Chatterji and nominated him as his executor. Siva Prasanna died on September 18, 1923. In the same year on December 8, Kali Prasanna Chatterji executed another will in which he left a legacy to the plaintiff for Rs. 2,000 and three other legacies for a total sum of Rs. 4,200. By this will Ganesh was appointed as the executor. Kali Prasanna died on November 13, 1924, leaving the aforesaid will as his last will and testament which is Ex. 1 in this case. In the will he after setting out the specific legacies stated by me just now, bequeathed

"all the rest residue and remainder of my estate after payment of my funeral and testamentary expenses and just debts and the legacies bequeathed unto and to the use of my said nephew Ganesh Chandra Chatterji for his own absolute use and benefit."

In other words Ganesh Chandra Chatterji was both the executor and residuary legatee under this will of his uncle. On September 10, 1925, Ganesh Chandra executed a mortgage (Ex. 2) by which he mortgaged the properties in suit in favour of the Hindustan Co-operative Insurance Society, Ltd., (hereinafter referred to as the society) who is defendant No. 2 and the only contesting respondent before us. The mortgage was to secure an advance of Rs. 1,05,000. The purpose of the loan was to administer the estate of Siva Prasanna who appointed the mortgagor as his executor under the will of September 18, 1923 already referred to. So far as the properties in suit are concerned, the mortgagor expressly stated that he was absolutely seised and possessed of or otherwise well and sufficiently entitled to them and that he was executing the mortgage in his individual capacity. So far as other properties of Siva Prasanna were included in this mortgage bond, the mortgagor expressly purported to give the mortgage in his own capacity as executor of Siva Prasanna. It was further stipulated in this document that the mortgagor will, within six months, obtain a probate of the will of his uncle Kali Prasanna under which he claimed the properties described in Sch. 3 and will execute a deed in favour of the mortgagees confirming these presents and in case the mortgagor failed to do that within the period of six months, he will re-pay to the mortgagees a sum of Rs. 30,000 out of the principal sum of Rs. 1,05,000 on the said terms. The mortgagor did not carry out this undertaking and the mortgagee instituted a suit in 1927 in the Calcutta High Court to enforce the mortgage of 1925. The society duly obtained a preliminary decree in January 1928, the decree was made final in December 1928. The properties mortgaged were ordered to be put to sale and the date fixed for the sale was June 19, 1931. The properties were accordingly sold and were purchased by defendant No. 1 who subsequently transferred his interest to the society, defendant No. 2. The sale certificate was duly granted on August 5, 1931, to the auction-purchaser. The sale certificate was transferred to the Court of Dumka for delivery of possession on July 23, 1932. An objection by the plaintiff to this delivery of possession was rejected and the delivery of possession was ordered on September 8, 1932. That matter came to this Court and by an order of March 28, 1933 (Ex. F) in Civil Revision No. 619 of 1932, Macpherson, J. affirmed the order of the lower Court but set it aside in so far as the property consisted of the holdings of a raiyat or a part thereof on the ground that transfers of this kind of property were invalid under s 27 of Regn. III of 1872.

In the meantime, the plaintiff on June 16, 1931, applied for letters of administration with the will of the late Kali Prasanna annexed before the District Judge of Dumka. A notice was issued to the executor named in the will who renounced his executorship on July 18, 1931. The letters of administration were granted without any opposition on September 21, 1932, and the present suit was instituted on September 5, 1933, asking for reliefs in the form that the plaintiff has a right to hold possession over the properties in suit as administratrix of the estate of Kali Prasanna Chatterji. She desired possession of those properties from the society after vacating the order of the learned Subordinate Judge which was affirmed by this Court to the extent indicated by the order of March 28, 1933. The events narrated above are strong indications of the correctness of the view that the appellant applied for letters of administration simply with a view to avoid or obstruct the contemplated sale fixed for June 19, 1931; but this consideration is wholly irrelevant. The plaintiff is always entitled to rely upon her rights and if these are established in accordance with law, the Court is bound to give proper relief to her irrespective of the motive which induced her to obtain letters of administration and then to institute the suit.

The real question is whether a legatee, to whom letters of administration with copy of the will annexed have been granted, is entitled to institute a suit for recovery of possession of the estate which has passed out of the possession of the executor as a result of a transaction entered into with the defendants by the executor in his character as the residuary legatee before he renounced the executorship without taking out probate. It is necessary in the first instance to determine whether the estate of Kali Prasanna Chatterji was unadministered on the date of the present suit. The plaintiff alleged in para. 5 of the plaint that the executor Ganesh Chandra Chatterjee did not take any steps for obtaining probate of the will of the testator, nor did he make any payment to the plaintiff and other persons according to the directions in the will and subsequently he openly renounced the executorship. The defendants refused to admit the correctness of these allegations in para. 4 of the written statement and they asserted that no legacies remained to be paid out of the estate of Kali Prasanna Chatterji. In the face of these pleadings, the onus was upon the plaintiff to prove that the estate remained unadministered. No evidence at all was offered by the plaintiff in the present case; it is significant that neither of the three legatees are made parties to this action, nor has any of them, including the executor and the plaintiff, chosen to come forward to give evidence to support the allegation of the plaintiff that the legacies still remained unpaid. But it was argued by the learned Advocate for the appellant, that as soon as it is established that letters of administration with will annexed have been granted by the Court of the District Judge to the plaintiff, it must be presumed in law that the specific legacies, or at least the legacy in favour of the plaintiff, was still due on the date when the letters of administration were granted on June 16, 1931, and that the same state of affairs should be assumed to continue on September 5 1933, the date when the present suit was filed. The current of authority, however, is against this view. It is enough to refer to two cases of the Calcutta High Court, namely Adwait Ch. Mondal v. Krishnadhane Sarkar (1) and Durgapada Bera v. Atul Chandra Bera (2). In the former case, it was held that

"where a will has been propounded and proved, the Probate Court should grant probate even though it should appear that there were no debts due to or by the testator and the legatees have been in possession in accordance with the directions of the will for a long time, it being absolutely necessary for the legatees to establish their title by proving the will."

and it was observed by the learned Judges that

"the Probate Court cannot go into the question whether the legatees have acquired independent title by adverse possession."

The case in Durgapada Bera v. Atul Chandra Bera (2), expressly follows the case just referred to and it is directly laid down in this case, that "in cases of testamentary succession, where there is a will and it has never been probated, the question whether the estate has or has not been already fully administered is not relevant and cannot be gone into by the Court in dealing with an application for probate or letters of administration."

In my opinion, therefore, the mere fact that the plaintiff obtained letters of administration with will annexed from the learned District Judge is no evidence to prove that the estate must be assumed to have been still unadministered nor that this Court should presume that all the legacies or at least the legacy in favour of the plaintiff has not been paid in accordance with the tenor of the will. The respondent, as already stated, obtained a title to remain in possession of the lands in suit by virtue of the sale in execution of a mortgage decree obtained on the footing of a mortgage bond which in my view must be taken to be executed by the executor in his personal capacity as a residuary legatee. Mr. P. R. Das relying upon the case in Doe v. Sturges (3), argued that it must be held that the mortgage was executed by the mortgagor in his capacity as an executor; but I am not able to place such a construction upon the mortgage bond as this will involve, apart from straining the language used in the document, the inference that the executor committed a breach of trust. The recitals in the bond are clear that Ganesh Chandra Chatterji was executing the mortgage in order to raise funds not to administer the estate of Kali Prasanna Chatterji but to administer the estate of Shiva Prasanna Chatterji. Unless I am forced to come to the conclusion by the clear words used in the bond, I must hold that no breach of trust was committed by the executor.

It is now well-settled that where a legatee under a will mortgages an immovable property left to him by the testator before obtaining the assent of the executor to the legacy, the property could form the subject-matter of a valid mortgage, and the mortgagee is entitled to cut off the equity of redemption. The reason for the rule is that although the legatees have no property in the legacies by the devise until the assent of the executor is obtained, they have an interest in them which is capable of being transferred. In other words, as pointed out in Khagendra Nath Mookerjee v. Khetra Nath Pal (4), at p. 176:

"Though on the assent of the executor, the full title passes to the legatee, the assent creates no new title; it merely perfects the title acquired under the will."

The question which is relevant to consider in these circumstances is whether the executor assented to the legacy. The facts speak for themselves. A useful illustration of how to determine whether there was an assent by an executor, which may be by conduct, to a legacy is afforded by the case in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Smith (5). The Master of the Rolls at p. 733 observes:

"All the relevant matters must be taken into consideration and, as Rowlatt, J. says in his judgment in the present case, you may have an assent by conduct: 'When it is said that the executor assents to a bequest, what is meant is not that he assents to the disposition of the testator, but that he assents to its taking effect upon the specific property if the bequest is specific, upon a sum of money if it is pecuniary, or upon the residue brought out by the executor at the end of the administration if it is a residuary bequest. Lord Haldane's exposition in Attenborough v. Solomon (6) makes it clear. The assent of the executor, it is important to add, may be inferand, when there is clearly nothing more to be done by way of administration."

The other Lord Justice took the same view. It was faintly argued that until the residue is ascertained, the residuary legatee was not in a position to transfer his rights to the defendants. In the present case it is admitted and proved that all the outgoings, as provided by the testator in the will, had been paid off before the mortgage of 1925, at least there is no evidence to the contrary. The principle applicable is expressed by Sir George Jessel in Trethewy v. Helyar (7), at p. 56 where he says :

"It appears to have been long settled law that there is no residue of personal estate until after payment of the debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and all costs of the administration of the estate of the testator. Therefore until you have paid the costs, you do not arrive at the net residue at all, and when you do arrive at it, it is distributed according to law. It is the principle.

See also The King v. Commissioners for the special purposes of the Income Tax Acts (8). Applying these tests to the present case as I have stated just now, the facts speak for themselves. There is no proof in the present case that any of the specific legacies remained to be paid out. Section 32, Succession Act (Act XXXIX of 1925), provides that the assent of the executor is necessary to complete the legatee's title to his own legacy and by s. 335 it is provided that when the executor is a legatee, his assent to his own legacy is necessary to complete his title to it and his assent may be express or implied. Sub-clause (2) provides that assent shall be implied if in his character of administering the property he does any act which is referable to his character of legatee and is not referable to his character of executor. The illustration to the section is of an executor who took the rent of a house or the interest of Govt. securities bequeathed to him and applied it to his own use and this is stated to be an assent. In the present case the mortgage was by the executor in his individual capacity as a legatee with respect to the properties bequeathed to him. He applied the money to his own use, because as I have pointed out already, the loan was taken by him not to administer the estate of his testator Kali Prasanna Chatterji. It follows by applying the principles in the English cases referred to above and also as provided by the sections of the Succession Act referred to above, that the executor assented to the legacy in his own favour on the date he gave the mortgage to the defendants. It was then argued by Mr. S. N. Bose appearing for the appellant that the executor has no power to give assent as an executor before he obtained the probate of the will, and as in this case no probate was ever obtained, the assent given by the executor to himself as a residuary legatee was no assent in the eye of the law. A short answer to this contention is afforded by the case in Venkata Subamma v. Ramayya (9), where their Lordships have authoritatively laid down that

"the estate of the testator vests in the executor, if he accepts office, from the date of the testator's death, and he has the powers of an executor under the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, even though probate has not been obtained."

In the present case the will has been duly proved before the Probate Court anterior to the suit. Mr. Bose sought to get over the difficulties thus created in his way by arguing that Ganesh Chandra Chatterji, the executor, having renounced his executorship in July, 1931, and he never having taken out any probate, the assent by him would be inoperative to pass any title to the defendants. He relied upon the case in Satyū Prasad Pal v. Motilal Pal (10) where the learned Judges made this observation at p. 688 :

"It is only the executors who have obtained probate that can act as representatives of the testator; and we think it but reasonable that an executor who renounces or refuses or is unable to act, should be regarded as if he had never been appointed."

This view seems to have been the older view of the Calcutta High Court but this was negated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case referred to above. The present suit is not a suit by a legatee to recover his specific legacy from the person in possession of the testator's estate. The learned Subordinate Judge observes that Kāli Prasanna Chatterji left two other houses worth about Rs. 4,000 in Jasidih Bazar. Be that as it may, if the testator left no other property than the property in suit, it is always open to the legatee to recover his specific legacy, if he brings an appropriate action and there is no other obstacle by way of limitation or otherwise in his way, by suing for the amount from the persons in possession of the property of the testator as transferees. The transferees of the residuary legatee or the residuary legatees are always liable to have the property in their possession reduced to a proper extent in order to repay the specific legatees: see Khagendra Nath Mookerjee v. Khetra Nath Pal (4), already referred to. For the reasons given above, I am of opinion that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

COLLECTOR OF SURAT—OPPONENT

Mussalman Waqf (Bombay Amendment) Act (XVIII of 1935), s. 61—Mutwallis residing within jurisdiction of District Court—Waqf property situate outside jurisdiction of such Court—Such Court, if can call upon mutwallis to contribute under s. 61—Company—Shares—Local situation of.

The jurisdiction of the Court is confined entirely to cases in which the waqf property is situate within the limits of its jurisdiction. The only waqfs, which can be called upon to make a contribution to the Waqf Administration Fund, are the waqfs to which, under the principal Act, the Court directing a contribution to be made has jurisdiction. There is nothing in the Act which extends the jurisdiction of the Court to cases in which the trustees reside within the district, or in which they apply income within the district. The only relevant fact to consider is the place where the waqf property is situate, and s. 3 of the Mussalman Waqf Act, 1923, and also s. 6-D of the Amendment Act, make it clear that the property of the waqf referred to in the sections is the corpus, and not the income. Where therefore the whole of the waqf property consisting of immovable property and shares in companies is situate in Burma but the mutwallis of the waqf reside within the jurisdiction of the Surat District Court, such Court cannot call upon the mutwallis to contribute to the Waqf Administration Fund under s. 61, Mussalman Waqf (Bombay Amendment) Act, 1935.

The general rule is that the local situation of a share is the place where the share can be transferred on the register of the company.

O. R. App. from an order of the District Judge, Surat, in Miscellaneous Application No. 32 of 1937.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and R. J. Thakor, for the Applicant.

Mr. B. G. Rao, Assistant Government Pleader, for the Opponent.

Beaumont, C. J.—These are a series of civil revision applications, which all raise the same point and are directed to a single judgment given by the learned District Judge of Surat. The facts are not quite the same in all the applications, but in the first application, which is No. 167 of 1938, the facts are that there is a waqf, the mutwallis of which reside within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Surat District Court, but the whole of the property of the waqf, which consists of immovable property and shares is situate in Burma. The shares are shares in companies registered in Rangoon, and the general rule is that the local situation of a share is the place where the share can be transferred on the register of the company. As far as the evidence goes, there is nothing to suggest that these Rangoon companies have any office within the Surat district at which their shares can be transferred. So that, we deal with the application on the footing that the whole of the corpus of the waqf property is situate in Burma, which is now outside British India, though in our opinion, the real question is whether the property is situate within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Surat District Court, and it does not matter whether property not so situate is situate within or without British India. The question which arises is, as to whether the mutwallis of this waqf can be called upon to contribute to the Waqf Administration Fund under s. 61, Mussalman Waqf (Bombay Amendment) Act, 1935.

Under s. 3, Mussalman Waqf Act, 1923, which is an All-India Act, it is provided that within six months from the commencement of the Act every mutwalli shall furnish to the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property of the waqf of which he is the mutwalli is situated, or to any one of two or more such Courts, a statement containing the following particulars, namely: (a) description of the waqf property sufficient for the identification thereof; (b) the gross annual income from such property; and other particulars which it is not necessary here to mention. Then, under s. 4, the Court can direct the publication of certain notices, and under s. 5 the mutwalli has to furnish the Court with certain statements. In our opinion, throughout the Act "the Court" referred to is the Court mentioned in s. 3, that is the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the waqf property is situate.

Under the Bombay Amendment Act of 1935, the main Act is amended in various particulars, but it seems to us that, throughout the whole of the amendments, "the Court" referred to is the same Court as that referred to in the principal Act. Under s. 61, which is the section in question in the present case, it is provided that every waqf shall, for the purpose of meeting the charges and expenses incidental to the registration, superintendence, administration and control of waqfs, the maintenance of the registers of waqfs, the scrutiny and audit of accounts of waqfs, the institution and defence of suits and proceedings relating to waqfs, and generally carrying into effect the purposes of the Act, be liable to pay to the Waqf Administration Fund of the District concerned, the contribution therein mentioned. In our opinion, the only waqfs, which can be called upon to make a contribution to that Fund, are the waqfs to which, under the principal Act, the Court directing a contribution to be made has jurisdiction, and that is in this case the Surat District Court.

The view of the learned District Judge was that, inasmuch as the bulk of the income is spent in Surat or its neighbourhood and the trustees reside there, he had jurisdiction to direct a contribution to the Fund in respect of all waqfs which have been registered in the District of Surat. But, in our opinion, there is nothing in the Act which extends the jurisdiction of the Court to cases in which the trustees reside within the district, or in which they apply income within the district. It seems to us that the only relevant fact to consider is the place where the waqf property is situate, and s. 3 of the main Act and also s. 6-D of the Amendment Act, in our view, make it clear that the property of the waqf referred to in the sections is the corpus, and not the income. No doubt in a case where the trustees of a waqf live in a place where the beneficiaries of the waqf also live, though the property of the waqf is situate elsewhere, and the trustees merely employ an agent to collect the income of the waqf property and transmit it to them, there would be some force in the contention that the trustees could be called upon to account at the place where they collect and distribute the income; but we are unable to give that meaning to the Act. It seems to us that the jurisdiction of the Court is confined entirely to cases in which the waqf property is situate within the limits of its jurisdiction. In all these cases we think that there will have to be an inquiry under s. 6-C of the Amendment Act to ascertain whether the whole or any substantial portion of the property of the waqf is situate within the jurisdiction of the District Court of Surat, unless in any case the Collector is prepared to admit that no property is so situate. If in fact it be found that no property is so situate, in our view the District Court has no jurisdiction in respect of the waqf and cannot call upon the mutwallis for any accounts. Probably, in that event, it would be better to amend the register by striking the particular waqf off the register in the Surat Court; but, as no application is before us to amend the register, we make no order in that respect. In cases in which some property of the waqf is situate within the local limits, contribution in respect of that property can be levied. The cases will have to be referred back to the District Court to be dealt with in accordance with these views. We make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Onus of proof—Claimant must show that he has right which was denied by adverse order.

Where in a claim proceedings under O. XXI, r. 58, an adverse order is passed against the claimant, the order is conclusive, unless it is displaced by a declaratory suit brought under O. XXI, r. 63. The onus is certainly upon the claimant to show that he has a right which was denied by the order. The burden cannot be discharged merely by pointing to the innocent appearance of the instruments under which the plaintiff claims. He must prove that they are as good as they look and it is not for the defendant to make out that they are collusive. 128 Ind. Cas. 647 (1) and 30 Ind. Cas. 855 (2), relied on. 105 Ind. Cas. 788 (3), distinguished. [p. 872, col. 2.]

A. from the appellate decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, Howrah, dated December 18, 1937.

Messrs. Gopendra Nath Das and Kshetra Mohan Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff and the suit was one commenced under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., for establishing his title to the property in suit. Defendant No. 1 is the decree-holder, who obtained a money decree against defendants Nos. 2—5. This decree was put into execution in Money Execution Case No. 30 of 1935 of the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Howrah and the property in suit was attached. The plaintiff thereupon preferred a claim under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. C. but that claim was refused, and following the adverse decision in the claim proceeding, the present suit was started. The plaintiff's case in substance is that the property in suit belonged to Debendra Nath Sadhukhan, defendant No. 5, who was one of the judgment-debtors, and he made a gift of it in favour of his wife by a document which was executed on May 3, 1930. The plaintiff purchased the property by a kobala from Mrinalini on May 9, 1935, for a consideration of Rs. 2,000 only and was in possession of it since the date of his purchase.

The suit was contested by defendant No. 1 alone and his contention was that the property was the joint family property of the Sadukhans of which Debendra was a member and that the deed of gift as well as the subsequent kobala in favour of the plaintiff were fictitious transactions entered into for the purpose of shielding the property from the creditors. Both the Courts below have accepted the defence version and have dismissed the plaintiff's suit. It is against these concurrent decrees of dismissal that the present second appeal has been preferred. Mr. Bose, who appears for the appellant, has raised a twofold contention before us. In the first place he has argued that the Courts below in arriving at the decision against the plaintiff had misplaced the onus. In the second place he has contended that the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court are not sufficient for the purpose of dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

Now so far as the first point is concerned, Mr. Bose's argument is that as the plaintiff is the ostensible purchaser in whose name the kobala admittedly stands, he must be presumed to be the real owner of the property and the burden would be upon the defendants to show the contrary. I do not think that this contention can be sustained. The plaintiff was the unsuccessful claimant in the claim proceeding and an order was made adversely to him. That order is conclusive unless it is displaced by a declaratory suit brought under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., and the onus is certainly upon the claimant to show that he has a right which was denied by the order Mohammad Ali Mohammad Khan v. Bismillah Begam (1). As Sir Lawrence Jenkins put it in Jamahar Kumari v. Askaran Boid (2), the burden could not be discharged merely by pointing to the innocent appearance of the instruments under which the plaintiff claims. He must prove that they are as good as they look and it is not for the defendant to make out that they are collusive. Mr. Bose lays stress upon the decision of the Judicial Committee which is to be found reported in V. E. A. R. M. Firm v. Maung Ba Kyin (3). In our opinion, this decision cannot be read as laying down any contrary proposition of law regarding the onus in such cases. In this case, the plaintiff was not only the ostensible owner of the property under a registered deed but out of the consideration of Rs. 20,000 the vendor who was a debtor to the father of one of the purchasers, was given a credit for the sum of Rs. 17,000 which he owed to the latter. The only question raised was whether the balance of Rs. 3,000 which was alleged to have been paid in cash, was really paid or not and their Lordships held that even though the evidence regarding the payment of this Rs. 3,000 could not be considered satisfactory, the consideration that was undoubtedly present, namely Rs. 17,000, was quite adequate having regard to the total value of the property and even if Rs. 3,000 was not paid, that was not enough for the purpose of drawing the conclusion that the sale was fraudulent. In fact, Viscount Dunedin was himself a party to the judgment in the later decision pronounced by the Judicial Committee which is to be found reported in Mohammad Ali Mohammad Khan v. Bismillah Begam (1) referred to above, and we do not think that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee did intend to say anything different from what was stated in the earlier case. The first contention of Mr. Bose, therefore, must be overruled.

Now, on the second point, the question raised by Mr. Bose is undoubtedly a question of fact. He has not been able to point out any misdirection or any error of law committed by the lower Appellate Court. His argument in substance is that although there might be a motive for executing this benami document, nevertheless, on the questions of passing of consideration and possession of the property, the lower Appellate Court has not considered the material facts which appear in evidence. On the question of consideration Mr. Bose has drawn our attention to the finding of the lower Appellate Court recorded at p. 56 of the paper-book, according to which a cheque given by the plaintiff was, as a matter of fact, honoured. The facts relevant to this matter stand as follows: The plaintiff drew a bearer cheque on the Allahabad Bank in the name of Mrinalini on April 29, 1935. The sale deed was actually executed much later, on May 9, 1935, and it was presented for registration on the day following. Before the Registrar the cheque was undoubtedly handed over to Mrinalini. The plaintiff's case is that the cheque was subsequently presented to the Shambazar Branch of the Central Bank by Tustu, the son of Mrinalini, and this amount was transferred to his credit. In support of this version, the plaintiff has examined an officer of the Allahabad Bank and also the son of Mrinalini who is said to have got the money transferred to his own account with the Shambazar Branch of the Central Bank of India.

The evidence of the clerk undoubtedly shows that the cheque was honoured and it was debited against the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court pointed out that had the plaintiff produced his pass-book, it could have been proved as to where the money did eventually go. Speaking for myself, I am not inclined to attach much value to this fact. But the other fact upon which the lower Appellate Court relies seems to me to be very much material. The whole story of the plaintiff was that it was Tustu, the son of Mrinalini, who cashed the cheque or rather had the money transferred to his own account with the Shambazar Branch of the Central Bank. He says in his evidence that he has got his pass-book and he has got the counterfoils of the cheques also. These he did not produce and no explanation is forthcoming for the non-production of these very material papers. For the purpose of showing that he really got the money entered in his own account, the pass-book would have been the best evidence possible and although he was in possession of the pass-book, he did not care to produce it. There is no other evidence to show that Mrinalini actually got the money, and under these circumstances, it seems to me that the lower Appellate Court was not wrong when it came to the conclusion that, as a matter of fact, only a show of payment was made but really no consideration passed in respect of the transaction. This is undoubtedly fortified by some suspicious circumstances to which reference was made by both the Courts below in their judgments. But as they are questions of fact, it is not necessary for me to refer to them in detail.

As regards the possession of the property, Mr. Bose has drawn our attention to the fact that there was mutation in the name of the plaintiff in the Municipal Register soon after the transaction took place. He has also drawn our attention to the fact that rents were realized by his client and that he did effect some repairs on the structures that stood on the land. On the question of realization of the rent, the finding of the trial Court is undoubtedly against him and the trial Court has pronounced the counterfoils produced by the plaintiff to be forgeries. The mason also was disbelieved by both the Courts below. It is true that the plaintiff had got his name mutated but if really the intention was to secrete the property and place it beyond the reach of the creditors, the show must be kept up and this was not in any way inconsistent with the theory of benami which the defendant has put forward. I do not think that it can be said in this case, having regard to the findings concurrently arrived at by both the Courts below, that there was any error of law which vitiated the judgments. Under these circumstances, we agree with the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal. There will be no order as to costs in this appeal.

Latifur Rahman, J.—I agree.

Bombay Hereditary Offices (Amendment) Act (V of 1886), s. 2—Watandar, who is—Person merely acquiring watan property without acquiring office, whether watandar—S 2, if applies.

Watandar means a person having a hereditary interest in a watan, i. e., the hereditary office and the property attached thereto, and includes so far as watan property is concerned, a person holding watan property acquired in the manner set out in the definition. But, a person who merely acquires watan property without acquiring the office is not a watandar, and to such a person and his family, the special law of inheritance enacted by the Watan Amending Act of 1886 has no application. 94 Ind. Cas. 649 (1), 114 Ind. Cas. 390 (2), 145 Ind. Cas. 262 (3) and 129 Ind. Cas. 391 (4), distinguish- ed. [p. 875, col. 1.]

S. A. from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 90 of 1935.

Messrs. G. P. Murdeshwar and U. S. Hattiangadi, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for the Respondent.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is a second appeal from a judgment of the Assistant Judge of Dharwar. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was the preferential heir to the suit property under the provisions of the Bom. Act V of 1886, which is an Act amending the Bom. Watan Act III of 1874. The trial Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit, but in appeal the learned Assistant Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. In the year 1927, the holder of the property was one Wasudevacharya, who died in that year, leaving the three defendants as his daughters, and the plaintiff, as the son of a deceased divided brother. There is no question that under Hindu Law the daughters would succeed as heirs. But s. 2 of Act V of 1886 provides that every female member of a watan family other than the widow, mother or paternal grandmother of the last male owner, and every person claiming through a female, shall be postponed in the order of succession to any watan, or part thereof, or interest therein, devolving by inheritance after the date of the Act, to every male member of the family qualified to inherit such watan. The plaintiff claims under that Act to be heir to Wasudevacharya in preference to his daughters.

The material facts, which are not in dispute, and which in any case bind us in second appeal, are these. The suit property was undoubtedly originally watan property, that is to say, it was given for services, as to part of it to a Desai and as to the other part to a Deshpande. But before 1818, when the British Govt. acquired authority in the locality of the watan property, this property had been alienated by the Desais and the Deshpandes to the ancestors of Wasudevacharya, and it is not disputed that before 1829, when the Regulations of 1827 came into operation, it was lawful to alienate watan property apart from the office. The alienees, however, of the Desais and Deshpandes never acquired the hereditary office to which these lands were attached; they acquired the watan lands without acquiring the office. In 1863, the services connected with this office were commuted by the Gordon Settlement. It is admitted that if Wasudevacharya was a watandar, then the plaintiff and the defendants are members of a watan family, an expression which is not defined in the Act V of 1886 or in the principal Act of 1874, and I think that the real question which arises is whether a person in the position of Wasudevacharya who acquires watan lands without acquiring the office and without being under any obligation to perform the services attached to the office is a watandar within the meaning of the Watan Act of 1874. That Act provides that the watan property, if any, and the hereditary office and the rights and privileges attached to them together constitute the watan; and "watan property" is defined as meaning the movable or immovable property held, acquired or assigned for providing remuneration for the performance of the duty appertaining to an hereditary office. Then we come to the definition of watandar and the Act provides that watandar means a person having an hereditary interest in a watan, and as I have said the watan includes both the hereditary office and the watan property, if any. Then the definition of watandar continues in these terms:

"It includes a person holding watan property acquired by him before the introduction of the British Govt. into the locality of the watan, or legally acquired subsequent to such introduction, and a person holding such property from him by inheritance."

It is argued for the plaintiff, that, inasmuch as his ancestor acquired the watan property before the introduction of the British Govt. into the locality, he falls within the definition of a watandar, and accordingly he and the plaintiff are members of a watan family, as that expression is used in the Act of 1886. But, in my opinion, the plaintiff's argument is unsound. The primary definition of a watandar is that he is a person having an hereditary interest in a watan, that is the office and the property, if any. The subsequent words which I have read are merely explanatory of the primary definition, and do not curtail it. In my opinion, the definition amounts to this, that watandar means a person having a hereditary interest in a watan, i. e. the hereditary office and the property attached thereto, and includes so far as watan property is concerned a person holding watan property acquired in the manner set out in the definition. But, in my opinion, a person who merely acquires watan property without acquiring the office is not a watandar, and to such a person and his family the special law of inheritance enacted by the Watan Amending Act of 1886 has no application. It is indeed difficult to see why the special rule of inheritance should be introduced in respect of property which is not connected with the holding of an office or performance of any service, although it may still retain its character of watan property. In my judgment, therefore, the trial Court was right in dismissing the plaintiff's suit and the lower Appellate Court was wrong. We have been referred to a good many cases, but none of them, in my judgment, covers the point we have to decide.

In my view it is not necessary for us to consider the further question on which the lower Courts differed as to whether the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation. The trial Court considered that it was, and the lower Appellate Court considered that it was not. I express no opinion on that question. The appeal will be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout.

N. J. Wadia, J.—The suit relates to three lands, Survey No. 87, pot-hissa Nos. 1 and 3, Survey No. 41, and Survey No. 32, which admittedly formed part of the Desai and Deshpande watans of Kallapur. Some time prior to 1818 the three lands were granted by the original watandars, the Desais and Deshpandes, to some ancestor of the plaintiff and the defendants. The lands continue to be shown as part of the Desai and Deshpande watans of Kallapur. Bhimacharya, the father of the plaintiff, and Wasudevacharya, the father of the defendants, had separated some time before Wasudevacharya's death in 1927. On the latter's death, the three defendants as his daughters succeeded to the property, and the plaintiff brought the suit for a declaration that he was the preferential heir to the lands under the provisions of s. 2 of Bom. Act V of 1886 by which every female member of a watan family, other than the widow, mother or paternal grandmother of the last male owner, and every person claiming through a female, is to be postponed in the order of succession to a watan, or part thereof, or interest therein devolving by succession after the date of the Act, to every male member of the family qualified to inherit such watan. No evidence has been led by the plaintiff to show that Wasudevacharya or any ancestor of the plaintiff was ever entered in the watan register as a member of the watan family of the Desais and Deshpande of Kallapur, and it has been conceded before us that the plaintiff and the defendants have never been entered in the watan register as watandars of the Desai and Deshpande watans. The only grounds on which the plaintiff claims that his family and that of the defendants is governed by the provisions of Act V of 1886 is, that the family holds some property which is admittedly part of the pargane-watan property of the Desai and Deshpande watans. The question in the appeal therefore is, whether the family of the plaintiff and the defendants can be considered a watandar family for the purposes of the Act of 1886.

Watandar is defined in s. 4, Bom. Hereditary Offices Act, 1874, as meaning a person having an hereditary interest in a watan, and the section explains that the watan property if any and the hereditary office and the rights and privileges attached to them together constitute the watan. Read along with this explanation watandar must mean a person having an hereditary interest in the watan property if any and the hereditary office and the rights and privileges attached to them, and it is clear that so far as the hereditary offices in this case are concerned, namely the offices of Desai and Deshpande, the family of the plaintiff and the defendants has no hereditary interest. The definition of a watandar given in the Act says further that watandar includes a person holding watan property acquired by him before the introduction of the British Govt. into the locality of the watan, or legally acquired subsequent to such introduction, and a person holding such property from him by inheritance. It seems to me that the word "person" must be taken to mean such person, that is a person having an hereditary interest in the watan property and in the hereditary office. It cannot mean that any alienee of watan lands whose alienation took place before the introduction of the British Govt. into the locality but who has no share whatever in the hereditary office could be treated as a watandar for the purposes of the Act. Watandar family, therefore, in s. 2 of the Act of 1886 must be taken to mean the family of a person who has an hereditary interest in the property of a watan and in the hereditary office and the rights and privileges attached to that office. It is clear, therefore, that the family of the plaintiff and the defendants cannot, merely because they happen to hold part of the watan property of the Desais and Deshpandes of Kallapur, claim the benefit of the special rule of succession which is laid down in the Act of 1886. The object of that provision was to keep the property of a watan family liable to render service to Govt. as far as possible in the hands of males who would be in a better position to render service. There would be no object in applying the rule of succession laid down in that Act, which is a deviation from the ordinary Hindu Law of succession, to persons who had no interest in the hereditary office for safeguarding the duties of which the Act was intended.

No case has been cited to us in which it has been held that the definition of watandar given in s. 4 of the Act of 1874 would include a person who happens to hold watan property by alienation or gift but who has no interest in the hereditary office. Mr. Gumaste for the respondent has referred to several cases which he contends support his case. But all of them are, in my opinion, distinguishable. Bodhrao v. Shrinivas (1), was a case of lands held by certain persons as mutaliks or deputies of the Deshpander. In such a case, clearly the mutaliks or deputies would be interested not merely in the watan property which they held but also in the hereditary office for the performance of which they were appointed as deputies. In Anna v. Gojra (2) the question was one of succession to watan property which had been held by one Rakhma who had succeeded to it as the mother of the last male holder. It had been contended that Rakhma's possession was adverse with regard to the plaintiffs who had claimed the estate as reversioners of Rakhma's son Hari. But it is clear that Rakhma was in that case holding the property as a member of the watan family and as representative watandar. There was therefore no question of the watan property having passed into possession of a stranger to the watan family who had no interest in the hereditary office. The case in Fakirgouda v. Dyamawa (3) is also clearly distinguishable. The question in that case was of succession to a woman who had inherited the watan property from her father prior to the passing of the Act of 1886. Here again although it was held that Sankawa who had inherited the property of her father had passed by marriage into the family of her husband, it was clear that Sankawa had been a member of the original watan family and she inherited the watan property and the right of service from her father, and her heirs therefore were clearly members of a watan family for the purpose of the Act of 1886. In Hanmant v. Secretary of State (4) the question was of succession to one Huchava who had succeeded to the watan on the death of her mother. There was no question that she was a member of the watan family and entitled to the hereditary office. In fact she was entitled as the representative watandar of the 8 annas share and the service rights. Clearly therefore her heirs, whoever they were, were members of a watan family for the purpose of Act V of 1886. None of these cases therefore can be regarded as in any way supporting the claim made by the respondent-plaintiff.

In Appaji Bapuji v. Keshav Shamray (5) a question somewhat similar to the question arising in this appeal came before the Court. The plaintiffs, who were the heirs of one Rudro, brought the suit to recover certain lands which had been sold to the defendants in execution of a decree against Rudro. They contended that the lands in suit, namely the village of Amangi were watan property in their hands. It was found that the lands had originally formed part of the desyat watan of the Desais of Wantmuri and the family of the plaintiffs were the mutalik Desais of the watan. A dispute had been going on between the Wantmuri Desais and the mutaliks with regard to the village which the Desais had throughout regarded as still part of their desyat watan. Part of the village lands, namely the Chahurat lands, had been entered as watan in the name of the mutalik Desais, and the rest had been entered as sarva inam other than watan. It was held that the mutalik Desais could be treated as independent watandars only in respect of the Chahurat lands, but that they could not be regarded as watandars with regard to the rest of the village. The whole village had formed part of the Wantmuri desyat and had come into the possession of the mutalik Desais from the Wantmuri Desais. The fact that it was nevertheless held that with regard to the portion of the village, other than the Chahurat lands, the mutalik Desais were not watandars clearly goes against the respondent's contention that alienees or donees of watan lands prior to the introduction of the British Govt. into the locality of the watan could be regarded as watandars, and therefore as members of the watan family, even though they had no right to the hereditary office to which the watan is attached. I agree, therefore, that the family of the plaintiff and the defendants cannot be regarded as a watan family for the purposes of Act V of 1886, and that the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 1—Person obtaining decree for compensation for malicious prosecution dying during execution proceeding—Execution, if abates—Whether can be continued by his heir—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 6—“Sufficient cause”—Delay in filing appeal held could be condoned.

It is true that the right to get compensation for malicious prosecution is personal to the person wronged, and to such a right, the maxim actio per- sonalis moritur cum persona (a personal right of action dies with the person) fully applies. If therefore such person dies before suing the wrong-doer, his heirs, executors or administrators cannot, after his death, maintain an action for the same relief against the wrong-doer. In such a case clearly there is a “discharge of the tort” by the death of the person wronged, and the wrong-doer is released from all liability for his tortious act. It is equally clear that if the injured person had brought a suit in his life-time, but had died before a decree had been passed in his favour, the suit would have abated and his legal representatives could not have continued the suit after his death, for the “right to sue” in such a case being personal to the deceased did not ‘survive’. The position, however, is different when the suit had been decided in the plaintiff's life-time and a decree passed in his favour granting him compensation. On the passing of the decree, there is no longer an actio personalis in existence; it has passed into a judgment and become a matter of record (transit in rem judicatum). The original personal claim has merged in the decree of the Court, and as such, its character has entirely changed. It has to all intents and purposes, become a part of the “property” of the decree-holder and, on his death, it devolves, as a part of his estate, on his heirs, executors or administrators, and they can execute it in the same manner as he would have done, if alive. 103 Ind. Cas. 297 (6), Muhammad Hussain v. Khushalo (7) and 63 Ind. Cas. 540 (8), relied on. [p. 879, col. 2.]

Held, Per Din Muhammad, J. (In order of reference) —that the delay in filing appeal could be condoned under s. 5, Lim. Act, as the appellant had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within time.

Ex. S. A. from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Gurdaspur, dated October 28, 1938.

Order of Reference

Din Mohammad, J.—Three questions fall for determination in this case: (1) whether the appeal is time-barred; (2) whether the plea that the decree cannot be executed is barred by the rule of res judicata considering that in a previous application for execution a decision had been given on this point; and (3) if the plea can be raised, whether the decree can be executed seeing that the original decree-holder has died. So far as the question of limitation is concerned, it is contended on behalf of the respondents that the memorandum of appeal was presented on the 91st day instead of the 90th, and even then it was incomplete as it was not accompanied by a copy of the judgment of the first Court. Reliance in this connection has been placed on Dhanpat Mal v. Mela Mal (1), Molu Mal v. Sri Ram (2), and Dyala v. Hiru (3). The authorities no doubt support the contention raised by the respondents' Counsel but I am disposed to condone the delay as I am satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the prescribed period. The certified copy of the appellate judgment, though ready on January 27, was actually delivered on 28th and if this day is also excluded, the appeal is well within time. Similarly, it is proved on the record that the appellant had put in an application for a copy of the first Court's judgment on the same day as the application for a copy of the appellate judgment was made but somehow or other the Copying Department could not trace the record. This caused some delay and eventually the appellant had to put in a second application for obtaining a copy of the first Court's judgment. According to the endorsement made by the Copying Department that copy could not be made available for about three weeks. There is thus no such default on the part of the appellant as cannot be overlooked. I, accordingly, extend the benefit of s. 5, Lim. Act, to the appellant and admit the appeal although presented after the expiry of the period of limitation. I may frankly confess that my main reason for taking this course is to have an authoritative pronouncement on the principal question involved in the case.

As regards the question of res judicata, there is ample authority in support of the proposition that a wrong decision on a question of law does not operate as res judicata in subsequent proceedings: see Taliemand v. Muhammad Din (4), and Jwala Debi v. Amir (5). I am not definite as to whether the decision was right or wrong, and am not therefore prepared to hold that the plea was barred or not by the rule of res judicata. I leave it therefore to the Bench disposing of the case to determine this question as well.

The third question, as remarked above, is really the most important question in the case. Counsel for the appellant contends that O. XXII, Civil P. O. as it stands applies to execution cases as well as to original suits and that the only exception that is made in the case of execution proceedings is that contained in r. 12 of O. XXII. Relying therefore on r. 1 of O. XXII, he argues that as the original cause of action could not survive on the death of the plaintiff, the execution proceedings should also be held to have abated finally on the happening of that contingency. Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, refers me to G. I. P. Ry. v. Ram Adhin (6), where a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court has observed that as soon as a personal action ends in a decree, the right to execute survives on the death of the decree-holder. This observation is not without force inasmuch as a decree when obtained becomes a part of the personal estate of the deceased, and as such, accrues to the benefit of the legal representatives; but as I am not clear as to whether O. XXII, r. 1, does not apply to execution proceedings in such cases, I consider that a decision by a larger Bench should be obtained in this case. I accordingly forward this case to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice for such action as he deems necessary.

Mr. C. L. Aggarwal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Parkash Chandra, for the Respondents.

Judgment of Division Bench

Tek Chand, J.—The facts of this case are no longer in dispute, and fall within a narrow compass. Kirpa Ram, father of the respondents, instituted a suit against Salig Ram, appellant, for recovery of Rs. 400 as compensation for malicious prosecution. The trial Judge granted Kirpa Ram a decree for Rs. 100. Both parties appealed to the Senior Subordinate Judge, who enhanced the amount of compensation to Rs. 200. On second appeal, this decree was upheld by Jai Lal, J. on November 26, 1936. The decree holder then took out execution of the decree. While the application was pending he died, and his sons (the present respondents) were brought on the record as his legal representatives, on their application made within 90 days of his death. The judgment-debtor raised an objection that the respondents had no right to continue the execution proceedings. He urged that the right to claim compensation for malicious prosecution was personal to Kirpa Ram, that on his death it did not 'survive' to his heirs and therefore the execution proceedings had abated. The executing Court overruled the objection holding that the proceedings to execute the decree had not abated. On appeal, the Senior Subordinate Judge upheld this order, relying upon a decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in (6) AIR 1927 All. 762; 103 Ind. Cas. 297.

(5) A I R 1929 All. 132.

G I P. Ry. v. Ram Adhin (6). The judgment-debtor preferred a second appeal to this Court, which came up for hearing before Din Mohammad, J. sitting in Single Bench. A preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the respondents that the appeal was time-barred, but the learned Judge held that in the circumstances, there was sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed period and he extended the time under s. 5, Lim. Act. He then referred the case to a Division Bench for decision of the main question, as there was no ruling of this Court directly bearing on the point and the correctness of the Allahabad ruling, relied upon by the Senior Subordinate Judge, had been impugned before him.

The contention for the judgment-debtor appellant is that as the original cause of action for a claim for malicious prosecution was personal to Kirpa Ram, which could not have survived to his legal representatives if he had died before the decision of his suit by the trial Court, it follows that the right to execute the decree, obtained by him in his lifetime on the same cause of action, was also personal to him, and that it was extinguished on his death, even though that event occurred after the passing of the decree. The argument is fallacious and I have no hesitation in overruling it.

It is no doubt true that the right to get compensation for malicious prosecution is personal to the person wronged, and to such a right, the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona (a personal right of action dies with the person) fully applies. If therefore such person dies before suing the wrong-doer, his heirs, executors or administrators cannot, after his death, maintain an action for the same relief against the wrong-doer. In such a case clearly there is a "discharge of the tort" by the death of the person wronged, and the wrong-doer is released from all liability for his tortious act. It is equally clear that if the injured person had brought a suit in his lifetime, but had died before a decree had been passed in his favour, the suit would have abated and his legal representatives could not have continued the suit after his death, for the "right to sue" in such a case being personal to the deceased did not "survive" (O. XXII, r. 1, Civil P. O.). The position however is different when the suit had been decided in the plaintiff's lifetime and a decree passed in his favour granting him compensation. On the passing of the decree, there is no longer an actio personalis in existence; it has passed into a judgment and become a matter of record (transit in rem judicatum). The original personal claim has merged in the decree of the Court and as such its character has entirely changed. The quondam plaintiff, as the decree-holder, has acquired the right to realize the amount decreed from the judgment-debtor, and this is a right of an entirely different character. He may enforce it himself by process of law, or (unlike the original claim) he may assign it to a third party, who can execute the decree. Further the decree itself (also unlike the original claim) is liable to attachment by a creditor of the decree-holder. It has to all intents and purposes, become a part of the "property" of the decree-holder and, on his death, it devolves, as a part of his estate, on his heirs, executors or administrators, and they can execute it in the same manner as he would have done, if alive.

It will be seen that the distinction is real and well-founded on principle and has been recognized in numerous cases in India. In the case relied upon by the lower Appellate Court, G. I. P. Ry. v. Ram Adhin (6), a suit for compensation against the railway administration, brought under Act XIII of 1855 (Fatal Accidents Act) by the father of a person, who had been killed in an accident, had been decreed by the trial Court. The railway had appealed and during the pendency of the appeal the decree-holder had died. It was contended on behalf of the railway that the appeal should be accepted and the decree reversed on the short ground that the action was personal to the father (decree holder) and the decree passed in his favour could not enure for the benefit of his sons, who were the brothers of the deceased, and as such, not among the persons entitled to compensation under the Act. This contention was rejected by the Court, on the ground that "the action having merged into the decree, the benefit of the decree passed to the heirs of the decree-holder on his death."

To the same effect is the decision of a Full Bench of five Judges in Muhammad Husain v. Khushalo (7), at p. 134 where it was held that

"in those cases in which an action would abate upon the death of the plaintiff before judgment, the action would not abate if final judgment had been obtained before the death of the plaintiff, in which case the benefit of the judgment would go to his legal representative."

This case was followed by a Division

Bench of this Court in Ram Koer v. Jiwan Singh (8), where the facts were similar. The distinction is very well brought out in cases which are the converse of those just referred to. Thus, where the plaintiff's claim for compensation for a personal wrong has been dismissed in its entirety by the Court of first instance and the plaintiff has appealed but has died before the decision by the Appellate Court, there is an abatement of the appeal, as the relief sought in appeal is the enforcement of the original 'right to sue' which had been rejected by the trial Court and had not matured in a decree: Bhagwant v. Joti Sarup (9), at pp. 14-15 and Mani Ram Lala v. Chattibai, 170 Ind. Cas. 159 (10). This distinction becomes clearer still in cases in which the plaintiff's claim for compensation for a personal wrong is decreed in part, and the defendant appeals praying that the suit should have been dismissed in toto while the plaintiff appeals or files cross-objections to enhance the damages, and during the pendency of the appeal, the plaintiff dies. In such cases it has been held that the defendants' appeal to get rid of the partial decree obtained by the plaintiff does not abate, for the decree enures for the benefit of his son; but the cross-appeal or cross-objections for grant of a further sum of damages filed by the plaintiff abate, as to this extent the claim had been refused by the trial Court and the plaintiff's prayer before the Appellate Court for enhancement is based on the original right to sue, which being personal to the plaintiff has abated on his death: Muzaffar Khan v. Ghulam Muhammad Khan (11). In Bhim Sain v. Muhommad Ali (12), the facts were the same as in the case last cited, except that the defendant (and not the plaintiff) had died during the pendency of the appeal, and it was held that the defendants' appeal could be continued by his sons; but the plaintiff's cross-objections for enhanced damages had abated. See also to the same effect Paramenchetty v. Sundararaja Naick (13) and Thiruvengadachariar v. Swami Tyengar (14).

"We are not dealing with a right of action. Plaintiff brought his action and succeeded by a judgment of the Court."

Lopes, J. said:

"It is said that the defendant having died, the maxim of actio personalis moritur cum persona applies. I think it does not apply in such a case as this. I think 'action' means right of action, and if that is the true way of looking at it, the right of action here had been determined before the death of the defendant."

It was accordingly held that "there was no abatement after judgment." The learned Counsel for the appellant has not been able to support his contention by any valid argument nor cite any case in which the view put forward by him had been taken. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Rani MOHINI SUNDARI AND ANOTHER—

OPPOSITE PARTY

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 8, 31—Person coming within terms of s. 8, if "person interested" within meaning of s. 39.

The term "any person interested" in s. 39, Guardians and Wards Act, is very wide. The matter cannot be decided merely with reference to something subjective in the mind of the applicant but some objective meaning must be given to the term. The fact that a person comes within the terms of s. 8 is quite sufficient to make him personally interested within the meaning of s. 39 and would not make him any the less a person interested merely because he is at enmity with the guardian.

O. Rules issued from the order of the District Judge, Murshidabad (Berhampur) dated June 30, 1938.

Messrs. Panchanan Ghose and Paresi Nath Mukherjee (Jr.), for the Petitioner.

Messrs. S. M. Bose and Pramatha Nath Mitra, for the Opposite Party.

Henderson, J.—The short point raised for determination in this Rule is th interpretation of the words "any person interested" in s. 39, Guardians and Wards Act, and it does not appear that it has ever been raised before. The opposite party was appointed guardian of the properties of two wealthy minors. The petitioner filed an application for her removal under s. 39 of the Act. The District Judge without considering the application on its merits dismissed it as incompetent. In view of a report submitted by an auditor of the accounts it appeared that all was not well with the administration of the estate and the learned Judge proposed to consider the matter on his own motion. The petitioner then obtained this Rule. The term "any person interested" is obviously very wide. Possibly it might be easier to say whom it excludes rather than whom it includes. We do not propose, and in fact the learned Advocate-General did not ask us, to attempt to formulate any definition or to give any comprehensive explanation of the term. We shall merely consider whether on the facts of the present case the petitioner has brought himself within the section. The learned District Judge found the petitioner to be at enmity within the opposite party and on that finding alone he came to the conclusion that the petitioner is not a "person interested." In other words, he has come to a finding as to the motive actuating the petitioner. He did not consider the real point at issue. In our opinion the matter cannot be decided merely with reference to something subjective in the mind of the applicant but some objective meaning must be given to the term. The petitioner is the first cousin once removed, of the minors. He is thus within the terms of s. 8 (b) of the Act and thereby entitled to make an application for the appointment of a guardian. Indeed a special notice was issued on him by the learned Judge himself in connection with the actual appointment. In our opinion the fact that he comes within the terms of s. 8 is quite enough to make him personally interested within the meaning of s. 39 of the Act. We accordingly make the Rule absolute. We set aside the order of the District Judge and direct him to hear and determine the application in accordance with law. We make no order as to costs in this Rule. No order is necessary on the other Rule (No. 1465 of 1938).

Khundkar, J.—I agree.

DEORAO AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XIV, r. 5—Court cannot make out case for plaintiff that was never put—Hindu Law—Alienation—Alienation by manager—Right of after-born co-parcener to challenge—Limitation—S. 6, Limitation Act (IX of 1908), if can be relied on.

It is not open to a Court to frame an issue on a point that does not arise out of the allegations made by the parties or their Counsel and the contents of documents. The trial Court cannot make out a case for the plaintiff that was never put forward.

Where an alienation is made by the manager without any legal necessity and without the consent of the other co-parceners then living, it will be invalid not only against those co-parceners but also other co-parceners born after the alienation provided that the alienation has not been ratified by the other co-parceners before his birth. Here the period of limitation would run from the date of the sale, and there is only one cause of action which would arise in favour of the other members who had not consented to the sale. Successive causes of action cannot arise as new members are born year after year. Such after-born co-parcener cannot rely on s. 6, Lim. Act and where he claims in his own right and not through his father, his father's insanity is immaterial. 160 Ind. Cas. 198 (1), 83 Ind. Cas. 1052 (2), and 86 Ind. Cas. 249 (3), relied on.

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Basim, dated November 27, 1936.

Messrs. T. L. Sheode and W. W. - Bhole, for the Appellant.

Messrs. V. K. Rajwade and W. K. Sheoray, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—In execution of a decree obtained by the second defendant against the first defendant Abarao, a field, Survey No. 25/2 in mauza Derdi, and a house in mauza Kupta were attached. The present plaintiff filed an objection to the attachment alleging that he had a third share in the house and the field but that objection failed. The plaintiff then instituted the present suit to establish his title to the above property.

The above property admittedly formed at one time part of the joint family estate of Abarao and his three brothers Rustamrao, Sahebrao, and the plaintiff's father, Marutrao. Marutrao became insane in 1906-07 and remained insane until his death in 1916-17. His son, the plaintiff was born on November 10, 1914. On December 16, 1909, the other three brothers

Abarao, Rustamrao and Sahebrao sold the above house and field and another field to one Bahirji Wagji. On December 11, 1916, Abarao and Sahebrao re-purchased the house in suit, and on February 14, 1919, Abarao re-purchased the field in suit. These facts are not disputed.

The plaintiff's case was that there was a partition between the four brothers in 1903 at which a third share in the attached house and field was allotted to his father Marutrao, that the sale in 1909 was a bogus sale which did not affect the rights of the plaintiff's father, and that the plaintiff contributed his share of the money spent on re-purchasing the property. There are findings, which are not now disputed, that the sale of 1909 was a genuine sale for consideration, that the brothers separated after 1909 and before 1916, and that the plaintiff did not contribute towards the re-purchases. On the pleadings then the plaintiff's case clearly failed, but after the case had been concluded and was awaiting judgment, the learned Subordinate Judge thought that the plaintiff could succeed if he pleaded that, though there was no partition before 1909, yet his father's share was not affected by the sale of 1909 because it was not for legal necessity or for the benefit of the family. The learned Subordinate Judge therefore took further statements from Counsel on both sides and framed an issue on the question whether there was legal necessity for the sale of 1909. In the absence of any evidence on that point he decided that there was no legal necessity for the sale and therefore, the sale was not binding on the share of the plaintiff's father. The plaintiff was, therefore, given a decree for a quarter share in the attached house and field. That decision was upheld in appeal.

The trial Court made out a case for the plaintiff that was never put forward. It was open to the plaintiff to take the alternative plea that, even if the property was joint family property in 1909, yet the sale was not binding on him because it was not for legal necessity, but he did not do so, and the question whether the sale was for legal necessity or not would be, partly at least, a question of fact. Under O. XIV, r. 5 of the Civil P. O. the Court has power to amend the issues or to frame additional issues on such terms as it thinks fit, but this power is controlled by r. 3, which provides that the issues are to be framed from the allegations made by the parties or their Counsel and the contents of documents. It is not open to a Court to frame an issue on a point that does not arise out of such material. Had the plaintiff applied to be allowed to amend his plaint so as to put forward such a case, such an application would probably have been disallowed on the ground that it put forward an entirely different case and had been made at a late stage. In the absence of such an amendment, the plaintiff obviously cannot succeed on the plea that there was no legal necessity. As the burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff, he must at least allege that there was no legal necessity and he has not even done that.

The suit must, in my opinion, also fail on the ground of limitation. At the time of the alienation the plaintiff was not born. It has been held in effect in Jinwarsa Gangasa v. Gunwantrao (1), that where an alienation is made by the manager without any legal necessity and without the consent of the other co-parceners then living it will be invalid not only against those co-parceners but also other co-parceners born after the alienation, provided that the alienation has not been ratified by the other co-parceners before his birth. If, therefore, the sale of 1909 was without legal necessity, it would be open to the plaintiff to avoid it on that ground, but he would be entitled to avoid it not as the representative of his father but in his own right. Section 6 of the Lim. Act provides:

"Where a person entitled to institute a suit is, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor, he may institute a suit within the same period after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor."

Here the period of limitation would run from the date of the sale, and there was only one cause of action which would arise in favour of the other members who had not consented to the sale. Successive causes of action cannot arise as new members are born year after year: see Sita Ram Singh v. Chedi Singh (2). The plaintiff was not in existence at the time from which the period of limitation would be reckoned and therefore he cannot rely on s. 6 of the Lim. Act. As he claims in his own right and not through his father, his father's insanity is immaterial. The decision of the Privy Council in Ranodip

Singh v. Parmeshwar Prasad (3), makes this quite clear. The present suit was brought in 1934 when the plaintiff was aged about 20. The period of limitation would be 12 years from the date of sale and the suit is, therefore, barred by limitation.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed with costs throughout. Counsel's fee Rs. 30.

S. P. R. SOMASUNDARAM—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 3—Appeal by third person on behalf of minor, when there is properly constituted guardian ad litem—Propriety.

Execution proceedings are only a continuation of the regular suit and the guardian ad litem appointed in the civil suit continues to be the guardian ad litem in execution proceedings and for the purpose of appeal. 178 Ind. Cas. 449 (4) and 171 Ind. Cas. 435 (5), relied on.

Where there is a properly constituted guardian ad litem, no one else can represent the minor in appeal, which would be dismissed in his absence. Such dismissal of appeal on the ground that the minor was not properly represented cannot affect the minor's interest as he is bound by it.

Mr. Kalyanwalla, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hay, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—An appeal was filed in the District Court of Bassein which purported to be by Singaram, a minor represented by his next friend Palaniappa Chettyar. The learned District Judge, without going into the merits, dismissed the appeal on the ground that Palaniappa Chettyar had no locus standi to appear on behalf of the minor at all as he had never been appointed his guardian ad litem. An appeal against this order has been filed by Palaniappa Chettyar purporting to be acting on behalf of the minor Singaram. I think the proceedings show beyond all doubt that Palaniappa Chettyar was never appointed the guardian ad litem of the minor Singaram. A decree was passed against Singaram and others in the Chief Court of Pudukkottai in Civil Regular No. 916 of 1934. That decree was transferred to the Sub-Divisional Court of Kyonpyaw for execution. At that time Singaram was represented by defendant No. 1, judgment-debtor Ramanathan Chettyar, who had been appointed his guardian ad litem. It was eventually held that the decree could only be executed against Singaram, and Ramanathan then stated that he refused to continue to act as the guardian ad litem of Singaram. An application was then made to the Chief Court of Pudukkottai to have a guardian ad litem appointed for Singaram, and subsequently a letter was received from the Registrar of the Chief Court of Pudukkottai stating, among other things, that T. M. Raghunatha Rao, a clerk to that Court, had been appointed guardian ad litem of the minor Singaram. In the meanwhile the person who is prosecuting this appeal, Palaniappa, had made an application to the executing Court asking to be appointed the guardian ad litem of the minor, but no specific orders were passed on this application. The Sub-Divisional Court, however, appears to have taken no notice of the letter from the Registrar of the Chief Court of Pudukkottai stating that T. M. Raghunatha Rao had been appointed guardian ad litem, and continued with the proceeding as though Palaniappa was the guardian ad litem of Singaram. On these facts the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that Palaniappa had no right to prosecute the appeal on behalf of Singaram. It seems to me that this decision was obviously correct, and Mr. Kalyanwalla on behalf of the appellant has no good ground for contending that this decision was wrong.

The main point taken on behalf of the appellant is that the learned District Judge should not have dismissed the appeal, but should have taken steps to have the minor properly represented before him. It is suggested that the dismissal of the appeal will adversely affect the interest of the minor and that it is the duty of Courts to protect minors. I do not think that this contention is sustainable. It has been held by the learned District Judge that the minor was not properly represented before him, and it was on this ground, and this ground alone, that the appeal has been dismissed. I am quite unable to see how such an order can affect the minor's interest, because he is not bound by it, vide the cases in Dakeshur Pershad Narain Singh v. Rewat Mehton (1), and Bhura Mal v Har Kishen Das (2). Moreover, under the Civil P. O., O. XXXII, r. 5 (1), every application to a Court which I presume includes an appeal, on behalf of a minor shall be made by his next friend or his guardian ad litem. Here where there was a properly constituted guardian ad litem, T. M. Raghunatha Rao, no one else could come forward on behalf of the minor and purport to represent him as his next friend.

Mr. Kalyanwalla relies upon the case in Upendra Nith Das v Daksha Yanti Debya (3). In that case notice of an appeal was served on a guardian ad litem for a minor respondent, but he did not appear, and therefore he was removed and a new guardian ad litem was appointed. It is suggested that this procedure ought to have been followed by the learned District Judge. I do not think that there is any difficulty in distinguishing that case from the facts of the case before me. In that case notice had been served on the guardian ad litem and he did not appear. In the case before me, no notice has been served on the real guardian ad litem Raghunatha Rao. Moreover, in the case before me the District Court was only concerned with matters which arose out of execution proceedings, which were taken out in pursuance of the decree passed by the Chief Court of Pudukkottai. The Chief Court of Pudukkottai is not under the superintendence of this Court, still less under the superintendence of the District Court of Bassein, and it would not appear that either of these Courts would be able to interfere with any order which had been passed by the Chief Court of Pudukkottai with regard to the appointment of a guardian ad litem in respect of one of the defendants in the case before that Court. There is ample authority for holding that execution proceedings are only a continuation of the regular suit and that the guardian ad litem appointed in the civil suit continues to be the guardian ad litem in execution proceedings and for the purpose of appeal. In this connection reference may be made to the cases in Hem Raj v. Khem Chand (4), and Brojendra Kishore Ray v. Shamsher Ali (5). In such circumstances it seems to me that the learned District Judge was fully justified in holding that Palaniappa was not entitled to appear and prosecute the appeal on behalf of Singaram, and I cannot see that he was wrong in dismissing the appeal on this ground. Mr. Kalyanwalla takes serious objection to the fact that execution proceedings are going on against the minor's property and that no notice has been issued to the minor's guardian ad litem. This matter is not really before me, but I may remark that the executing Court would be well-advised to see that due notice is given to the guardian ad litem of Singaram, namely Raghunatha Rao, before action is taken in execution against the minor's property and I would draw attention to the provisions of the Civil P. O., O. XXXII, r. 5 (2). This appeal is dismissed with costs, Advocate's fee three gold mohurs.

Civil Miscellaneous Application No. 161 of 1939

YORKER, J.

MRS. N. A. ALEXANDER—APPLICANT
versus

M. S. JALIL—PETITIONER AND ANOTHER —RESPONDENT—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XXXII, r. 5—Decree absolute passed in proceedings for dissolution of marriage—Defendant minor but not represented by guardian—Decree, if can be set aside under s. 151 on application of third party—Decree is nullity but declaration to that effect cannot be made on application by third party under s. 151—O. XXXII, r. 5, applicability of.

Where the High Court in proceedings for dissolution of marriage has made not merely a decree nisi but also a decree absolute for dissolution of a marriage, a third party cannot move the High Court to set aside that decree absolute by applying the provisions of s. 151, Civil P. O., and the High Court by the application of that section or any other section has no jurisdiction to set aside its own decree. [p. 883, col. 2.]

It may be the case that material facts have not been brought to the notice of the High Court, and that throughout the proceedings in Court right up to and including the decree absolute, the defendant was a minor, and that will necessarily affect the decree if the appointment of a guardian ad litem of the defendant was essential in a suit under the Divorce Act, but that is not by itself any reason for the Court to assume a jurisdiction under s. 151, Civil P. O., on an application by a stranger which it does not possess. 113 Ind. Cas. 511 (1), 86 Ind. Cas. 852 (2) and 130 Ind. Cas. 575 (3), distinguished. 61 Ind. Cas. 454 (4), 66 Ind. Cas. 910 (5) and 63 Ind. Cas. 847 (6), relied on. [p. 886, col. 1.]

Obiter.—Section 7, Divorce Act, merely relates to the principles and rules which are to guide the Court in acting and giving relief in suits and proceedings under the Divorce Act. But under s. 45, the provisions of Civil P. O. apply to proceedings under the Divorce Act and as the Code requires that a guardian ad litem should be appointed for a minor defendant, it would prima facie appear to follow that where no guardian ad litem had been appointed, the decree is a nullity, but the declaration that the decree is a nullity cannot be given upon an application by a third party under s. 151, Civil P. O. [p. 888, col. 1.]

C. Misc. App. on an application, praying that the decree for dissolution of marriage passed in Divorce Case No. 9 of 1937, be set aside the following order was passed by this Hon'ble Court:—

Mr. R. I. Wahid, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. L. Saksena, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ghulam Imam, for the Respondent.

Order.—This is a Civil Misc. Application by Mrs. N. A. Alexander asking me to set aside a final decree for dissolution of marriage between M. S. Jalil and Mrs. M. P. Jalil, daughter of the applicant, on the allegation that throughout the proceedings both for decree nisi and decree absolute, Mrs. M. P. Jalil, respondent in the divorce suit was a minor, a fact which was not brought to the notice of the Court by the petitioner M. S. Jalil, with the result that no guardian ad litem was ever appointed on behalf of the respondent. No section of the Civil P. O. was mentioned in this application, but learned Counsel has sought to argue it by relying on s. 151 of that Code read with O. XXXII, r. 5.

It was at first found impossible to serve any notice on Mrs. M. P. Jalil who had been treated by the applicant as an opposite party. She was ultimately served by notice in the newspapers, and on the date of argument put in an appearance and was represented by Counsel.

At an earlier stage on May 8, 1939, two issues were framed:—

"(1) Is this application maintainable by the applicant under s. 151 of the Civil P. O. on the facts stated therein?

(2) In the final decree of this Court dated November 23, 1938, a nullity for the reason that the respondent Mrs. M. P. Jalil was a minor and was not represented in the suit by a guardian ad litem?"

During my absence on leave, the matter came up before Bennett, J. who passed an order on September 11, in which he remarked that Mrs. M. P. Jalil would attain the age of 18 on September 15, 1939, and that in these circumstances he thought it desirable that notice should issue to her to elect on or before the next date of hearing whether she wishes to proceed with this application under O. XXXII, r. 12, Civil P. O. Mrs. M. P. Jalil has now appeared and states through her Counsel that she does not wish to proceed with this application herself under the provisions of O. XXXII, r. 12. The application therefore stands before me purely as an application made by a third party relying on s. 151 of the Civil P. O., which it is suggested may be read with r. 5 of O. XXXII. That rule provides that "Every application to the Court on behalf of a minor, other than an application under r. 10, sub-r. (2), shall be made by his next friend or by his guardian for the suit. (2) Every order made in a suit or on any application, before the Court in or by which a minor is in any way concerned or affected, without such minor being represented by a next friend or guardian for the suit, as the case may be, may be discharged, and, where the Pleader of the party at whose instance such order was obtained knew, or might reasonably have known, the fact of such minority, with costs to be paid by such Pleader."

I am clearly of opinion that O. XXXII, r. 5 is not applicable except while the proceedings in a suit are still pending. That seems to me to follow from the whole scheme of the Order and is clearly indicated by the wording of the large majority of the rules.

This being so, the sole question for decision is whether in the circumstances that now exist, namely that this Court has made not merely a decree nisi but also a decree absolute for dissolution of a marriage, a third party can move this Court to set aside that decree absolute by applying the provisions of s. 151 and whether this Court by the application of that section or any other section, has jurisdiction to set aside its own decree. The wording of s. 151 is as follows:—

"Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court."

No doubt the wording of the section is very wide and would seem to give very wide powers to the Court, but I am clear that the application of the section of which I am asked to approve goes far beyond the scope of the section. It is true that the section has been used for the purpose of setting aside an ex parte decree, but it is doubtful whether that use of the section was a proper use of it. Speaking generally, once a final decree has been made, that decree can only be set aside by appeal. It is possible, of course, for a person affected by a decree to institute a suit to have it declared that that decree is not binding upon him either because it is vitiated by fraud or because it is in some other way defective or in some subsequent suit a party may plead, that a certain decree has no effect in his case because it is null and void, as for instance, on the specific ground that at the time when the decree was passed the defendant was a minor or a lunatic and was not represented by a guardian ad litem. But neither of these methods of getting rid of the effect of a decree result in the setting aside of the decree. The decree still remains, though it may, as a result of those attacks, have lost its force.

Now in the case of suits under the Indian Divorce Act, it is quite clear that there is a stage during which a decree nisi can be assailed and the Court which made that decree can reverse the decree nisi itself, that is under the provisions of s. 16, which provides that a decree nisi shall not be made absolute till after the expiration of such time, not less than six months from the pronouncing thereof, as the High Court, by general or special order from time to time, directs. During that period it is specifically provided that "any person shall be at liberty, in such manner as the High Court by general or special order from time to time directs, to show cause why the said decree (nisi) should not be made absolute by reason of the same having been obtained by collusion or by reason of material facts not being brought before the Court."

This enables a third party in India to approach the Court in the same manner as a Court is moved in England by the King's Proctor. There is no provision under the Indian Divorce Act for a decree which has been made absolute being assailed by application in the manner in which a decree nisi can be assailed under s. 16. It may be the case that material facts have not been brought to the notice of this Court, and that throughout the proceedings in this Court right up to and including the decree absolute, the defendant Mrs. M. P. Jalil was a minor, and that will necessarily affect the decree if the appointment of a guardian ad litem of the respondent was essential in a suit under the Indian Divorce Act, but that is not by itself any reason for the Court to assume a jurisdiction which it does not possess.

Learned Counsel has sought to rely on three reported cases; none of them by any means on all fours with the present case: J. U. E. Maung v. Chettyar Firm (A. I. R. 192 Rangoon, 273) (1) it was held that "although a Court may have no power under s. 15 to set aside an ex parte decree against a party to suit unable to comply with the provisions of O. IX, r. 13, and the law of limitation, still a Court can under s. 151 set aside an ex parte decree at the instance of a person not a party to the original suit under peculiar circumstances and make him a defendant and allow him to defend the suit. There is a clear distinction between a case in which an ex parte decree is set aside in order to allow a third person to be made a defendant and defend the original suit and a case where the third person who has made the application could not, even if successful, be made a defendant and allowed to defend the suit".

The case quoted from A. I. R. 192 Calcutta, 1145 (Rash Behari Mazumdar v. Kasum Kumari Guha) (2) appears to me to have no application whatever to the circumstances of the present case. In Samaresh Chakravarti v. Jalpaiguri Banking and Trading Corporation, Ltd. (A. I. R. 1931 Cal., 168) (3) a plaintiff who had obtained an ex parte decree received information that on the date of the suit, the defendant was lunatic and that fact was confirmed by proceedings in lunacy and declaration to that effect. The defendant then died and the decree was sought to be executed against the legal representatives, against which the legal representatives by an affidavit set up an objection that the decree was a nullity on account of the defendant's lunacy. The plaintiff thereupon took out a summons to the effect that the decree should be set aside and the suit after certain amendments in the plaint should be re-constituted as a suit against the legal representatives, and it was held that the order allowing such summons and amendment could be made. Their Lordships seem to have taken the view that it was quite possible to make an order that the summons be treated as a memorandum of review. I do not think that it could, by any means, be possible for a third party to move an application in review. In any case this decision can be no support for the proposition put forward on behalf of the applicant that under s. 151, a Court should make such an order as is sought at the instance of a third party.

On behalf of the respondent or opposite party Mr. M. S. Jalil, reliance has been placed on several rulings which seem to me to be of much clearer applicability. In Lala Ajodhya Prasad v. Mst. Katori, (61 Ind. Cas 484) (4) it was held by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court that a Court has no jurisdiction to set aside an ex parte decree, and order the whole case to be re-opened at the instance of a person not in any way interested in the decision of the case and who has been expressly exempted from the decree. In that case certain persons who had been made pro forma defendants and had absented themselves, from the hearing, made an application after the passing of a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, to set aside that decree on the ground that they had not been duly served with notice. The application was apparently under the provisions of O. IX, r. 13. The decree-holder thereupon applied to the Court stating that these two persons had only been made pro forma defendants and that no relief was sought against them, and formally exempted them from the decree. By this act of the decree-holder the applicants became third parties not interested in the decision of the case, and O. IX, r. 13, ceased to be applicable to them. The trial Court, however, having re-opened the case, it was held by the High Court that trial Court had no jurisdiction to make the order, it being an order which could clearly not have been made by the trial Court by the application of any section except s. 151.

In Perumal Moopan v. M. K. Venkatachariar (68 Ind. Cas. 910) (5) it was held by a Single Judge of the Madras High Court that "the language of s. 151 of the Civil P. O. is wide and refers to inherent powers of a Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the sake of justice. A stranger to a litigation, however, cannot intervene after a suit or proceeding is disposed of, and claim the protection of s. 151 of the Code or appeal to the inherent powers of the Court to do justice."

The matter was discussed at some length in Neelaveni v. Narayana Reddi, (I. L. R. 43 Madras, 91) (6), in which it was held by a Full Bench of the same High Court that a Court has no power, apart from the provisions of O. IX, r. 13 of the Civil P. O., to set aside an ex parte decree passed by itself." In this case one of the learned Judges remarked:

"moreover, I am clear that s. 151 must be construed not as empowering a Court to exercise power which it never possessed, but as preserving to it those powers which it has been in the habit of exercising and which by an oversight or by failure to specify have not been particularized in the statute. Section 151 has been introduced for the simple reason that no Code can exhaustively deal with the procedure for exercising every power which a Court of Justice is competent to exercise; and the language of the section shows that it should be availed of only where a power which has been exercised has not been provided for in the Code."

It has never been held, so far as I am aware, that a Court has an inherent power to set aside at the instance of a stranger, a decree which has been passed by it. The power to set aside such a decree at the instance of the party directly affected is contained in O. IX, r. 13. Section 151 cannot, in my opinion, be invoked for the purpose of enabling a Court to set aside an ex parte decree at the instance of a stranger. It follows that, in my opinion, the only possible finding on Issue No. 1 is that this application is not maintainable by the applicant under s. 151 of the Civil P. O., on the facts stated therein.

In these circumstances the question set out in the second issue framed by me, namely:

"Is the final decree of this Court dated November 23, 1938, a nullity for the reason that the respondent Mrs. M. P. Jalil was a minor and was not represented in the suit by a guardian ad litem does not really arise for decision. Learned Counsel for the respondent Mr. Jalil has contended that it was not necessary under the rules of the Code followed in England in Divorce suits for a minor respondent to be represented by a guardian ad litem. He refers to a passage in Rattigan on Divorce (Second Edition) p. 521 in which it is said, "It will be noticed that under r. 103" (of the Rules and Regulations of the English Divorce Court)

"it is not necessary for a minor co-respondent to elect a guardian or to have a guardian assigned to him for the purpose of conducting his defence. But in view of the wide terms of O. XXXII, r. 5, cl. (2), Civil P. O. it is submitted that a co-respondent who is a minor must in suits under the Indian Divorce Act be represented by a guardian ad litem. Moreover, a co-respondent is a 'defendant', and O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Code is as applicable to him as to a respondent."

On p. 519 it is remarked, "s. 49 of the Divorce Act makes no provision for the case of a minor respondent or co-respondent". Section 49 provides that a minor petitioner shall sue by his or her next friend to be approved by the Court. The Commentator, however, goes on to refer to O. XXXII, r. 3, and it is quite clear that he is of the opinion that a guardian ad litem must be appointed for a minor respondent. At the top of p. 521 he remarks: "The effect of this section" (referring to O. XXXII, r. 5 (2))

"is that no order by which a minor may in any way be concerned or affected can legally be made without his being represented by a next friend or guardian for the suit (Aminchand v. Collector of Sholapur, 13 Bom. 234) (7)"

Learned Counsel suggests that s. 7 which provides that the Courts are to act on the principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England for the time being acts and gives relief, would bring in the application of the passage quoted from p. 521 referring to the election of a guardian by a minor co-respondent. It does not appear to me that s. 7 has any application in the matter at all. That section merely relates to the principles and rules which are to guide the Court in acting and giving relief in suits and proceedings under the Indian Divorce Act. Section 45 provides that

"Subject to the provisions herein contained, all proceedings under this Act between party and party shall be regulated by the Civil P. O."

That Code requires that a guardian ad litem should be appointed for a minor defendant. It would prima facie appear to follow that where no guardian ad litem had been appointed, the decree is a nullity, but this is not the stage at which such a declaration can be given, nor as I have already said can such a declaration be made on a mere application by a third party. It may be wise for the petitioner Mr. M. S. Jalil to act in future on the supposition that the decree which he has obtained is a nullity, but the question whether it really is or is not a nullity is one which could only arise for decision in some future case in which the nullity or otherwise of the decree nisi and final decree for dissolution of the marriage is a matter in issue, as it might be, for example, in a Criminal Court in which Mr. Jalil was charged with bigamy or in a civil suit in which other matters depend on the validity or otherwise of the decree. I do not think it would be proper to make a pronouncement on that question on a miscellaneous application of this kind by a third party who is entitled to no relief in this application and no such decision.

On my findings above, I hold that there is no force whatever in the present application which accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. The only certificate of Pleader's fees incurred by either of the respondents on the record is that of Mr. Saksena representing Mr. Jalil for Rs. 85 which is by no means unreasonable, and is accordingly admitted under the provisions of rule XI, Chap. XIX of the Chief Court Rules for taxation as Pleader's fee.

Special costs were asked on behalf of the respondent Mr. Jalil, but I find no ground for awarding any special costs in this case.

MANNO—DECREE-HOLDER—OPPOSITE PARTY
O. P. Debt Conciliation Act (II of 1933), ss. 16 (b), 15—Decree-holder alleging before Board that debt was bogus—Board holding it genuine—Question, if can be re-agitated in Civil Court.

The intention of the Legislature in s. 16, O. P. Debt Conciliation Act, was to preclude the Civil Courts from examining the reasons, whether right or wrong, which induced the Debt Conciliation Board to issue a certificate under s. 15. It may be that if fraud was practised on the Board without the knowledge of the Board, the Civil Courts could set the matters right: but where the decree-holder did allege to the Board that the other debt was bogus, but in spite of that the Board accepted it as a genuine one, the decree-holder is not entitled to re-agitate the question of fraud in the Civil Court.

App. for revision of the order of the Court of Small Causes Judge, Ramtek, dated April 29, 1939.

Mr. G. R. Pradhan, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. B. Chandurkar, for the Opposite Party.

Order—The applicant judgment-debtor obtained from the Debt Conciliation Board a certificate under s. 15 of the Debt Conciliation Act, but the lower Court has refused to give effect to it and has ordered execution to proceed. Only two creditors were named before the Board, the present decree-holder and one Imratlal. In the Civil Court, the non-applicant decree-holder Manno took the plea that Imratlal's debt was fictitious and so there is no debt for the settlement of which this decree-holder can be postponed under s. 15 (3). After recording evidence, the Subordinate Judge found that the debt of Imratlal is fictitious. The point now to be decided in revision is whether the Judge had jurisdiction to go into this question at all.

The applicant relies on s. 16 (b) of the Act which says that no Civil Court shall entertain any application to execute the decree, the execution of which is suspended under sub-s. 3 of s. 15. On the other hand it is argued that Civil Courts have full power to enquire into the facts necessary for the issue of a certificate especially where fraud was alleged. Reference was made to Sadasheo Rao v. Roopchand (1) in which it was held that where there was a miscalculation by the Board about the 40 per cent. of the debts due to the creditors, the Civil Courts could find that the Board had acted without jurisdiction in issuing a certificate under s. 15 against a creditor who did not agree to conciliation. That involved not a question of initial jurisdiction to effect a settlement to which s. 7-A is applicable but a question of jurisdiction to issue a certificate. Interference may have been justified as the error of the Board was approved on the face of the record. But with all due respect I find it a little difficult to reconcile that decision with the remarks of their Lordships in the published case of Shivdin v. Ram Ratan (2):

"If the Board had jurisdiction to attempt to effect a settlement, then the Civil Courts would not have jurisdiction to inquire whether that jurisdiction was properly exercised, and the legality or validity of any orders passed in the exercise of the Board's jurisdiction could not be questioned in any Civil Courts on any ground except perhaps fraud."

These remarks have my respectful concurrence as I think that the intention of the legislature in s. 16 was to preclude the Civil Courts from examining the reasons, whether right or wrong, which induced the Debt Conciliation Board to issue a certificate under s. 15. It may be that if fraud was practised on the Board without the knowledge of the Board, the Civil Courts could set the matters right; but that was not the case here. The decree-holder did allege to the Board that the other debt was bogus, but in spite of that the Board accepted it as a genuine one. Neither side has filed copies of the proceedings to show how the Board arrived at that conclusion, but that is immaterial.

The point was decided by them. The decree-holder could have applied promptly for a review of the decision but he did not. I am of opinion that he was not entitled to have the question of fraud re-agitated in the Civil Court. To hold otherwise would open the way to frivolous applications and lead to Courts being called upon to decide about the existence or validity of debts of persons who are not parties to the suits before them.

I hold that the Civil Court acted without jurisdiction in making this inquiry. Its order is set aside, and effect must be given to the certificate issued against the non-applicant decree-holder. Costs of this application on the non-applicant. Counsel's fee Rs. 15.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 73, 115—Order under s. 73, whether revisable under s. 115—Order under s. 186, Companies Act (VII of 1913), if decree within meaning of s. 73—Custody Court holding money under O. XXI, r. 52, becoming execution Court by reason of various applications for execution being filed in it—Order passed by such Court under s. 73—Competency.

An order passed by a Court under s. 73, Civil P. O., though in nature administrative one, is yet a judicial order so as to be subject to revision under s. 115. 104 Ind. Cas. 735 (2), relied on, Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (1), distinguished.

It is not and should not be an invariable rule that revision should not be entertained whenever there is another remedy open to the party, for there is no warrant for this either in s. 115 or in any other provision of the Civil P. O. Hence an order under s. 73, Civil P. O., is revisable under s. 115 even though the applicant has got a remedy by way of suit under s. 73 (2). [p. 891, col. 2.]

An order under s. 186 of the Companies Act, cannot be regarded as a decree within the meaning of s. 73, Civil P. O. 160 Ind. Cas. 346 (17), A Reference under s. 28 of Act No. VII of 1870 (18) and 151 Ind. Cas. 1027 (19), relied on, 100 Ind. Cas. 744 (15) and 47 Ind. Cas. 997 (16), distinguished. [p. 892, col. 1.]

Although the custody Court which holds money under O. XXI, r. 52, Civil P. O., cannot proceed under s. 73 of the Code, yet, where, long before the date on which the order under s. 73 was passed by the custody Court, that Court had ceased to be a custody Court under r. 52 and had become an execution Court by reason of various applications for execution being filed in it, it is perfectly competent to that Court to award rateable distribution. [p. 893, col. 1.]

O. R. App. of an order of the District Judge of Unao, dated August 6, 1936.

Mr. Ram Bharosey Lal, for the Applicant.

Messrs. M. Wasim, K. P. Saksena, L. S. Misra, Mahabir Prasad, M. M. Gaur and H. K. Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—These are applications for revision under s. 115, Civil P. O. against an order of the learned District Judge of Unao, dated August 6, 1936, awarding rateable distribution of assets under s. 73, Civil P. O.

The facts leading up to the present applications are as follows:

Jai Ram Das, father of Shanti Lal, opposite party No. 19 in application No. 153, obtained a decree for profits of a Sugar Mill against Jagannath Prasad and Nihal Chand from the Court of the Civil Judge of Unao on March 28, 1933. In 1934, his son Shanti Lal sued the same persons for profits of the mill relating to subsequent years. This suit was referred to certain arbitrators residing in the Punjab who were given authority to go behind the previous decree obtained by Jai Ram Das and to decide the disputes between the parties afresh. On December 4, 1935, the arbitrators delivered their award holding that if the defendants deposit to the credit of Shanti Lal a sum of Rs. 49,166 in Court on or before January 15, 1936, they would be relieved of interest and costs of Shanti Lal. This amount was tendered to the Court of the Civil Judge, Unao, on January 15, 1936, but as on that date the learned Civil Judge was on leave, the money was deposited in the Court of the District Judge. On the same date the award of the arbitrators was made a rule of Court.

It appears that Jai Ram Das was indebted to various persons under decrees and orders of different Courts. One of his creditors was the Lyallpur Bank, Ltd. (in liquidation), applicant in application No. 153 of 1936, and another was Ramji Das, applicant in application No. 191, who is now dead and is represented by Dwarka Das and four others. The other creditors to whom rateable assets were awarded by the learned District Judge, are opposite parties in the applications before us. As one of the creditors of Jai Ram Das was the Secretary of State for India in Council, the learned District Judge held that his debt had priority over all the other debts. He ordered that after the claim of the Secretary of State was fully satisfied out of the amount in deposit, the balance should be rateably distributed among the various creditors excluding the Lyallpur Bank. With regard to the Bank he held that as the Bank held only an order under s. 186 of the Indian Companies Act, it could not be said to hold a decree within the meaning of s. 73 of Civil P. O. Ramji Das claimed to be entitled to have the entire amount of his decree paid out of the deposit but this claim was overruled by the learned Judge who held him entitled only to a rateable share.

Application No. 153 has been brought by the Lyallpur Bank against the dismissal of its claim and application No. 191 has been filed by Ramji Das against the finding of the learned Judge that he is entitled only to a rateable share of the assets. The other creditors have submitted to the order of the learned Judge.

The learned Counsel for Messrs. Bird & Co. opposite party No. 13 in the Lyallpur Bank's application has raised a preliminary objection against both the applications on the ground that no revision lies against the order in question.

His first ground is that the order passed by the learned District Judge is an administrative and not a judicial order so as to be subject to revision under s. 115, Civil P. O. for this proposition learned Counsel relies on the case of Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (L. R. 23 I. A. 203) (1) but all that was held in that case was that an order under s. 295 of the (old) Civil P. O. for the distribution of the price of property sold in execution amongst the decree-holders is a step in an execution proceeding and does not import a conclusive adjudication as to rights of priority. The learned Counsel relies on the following remark of their Lordships at p. 209*:

"The scheme of s. 295 is rather to enable the Judge as a matter of administration to distribute the price according to what seem at the time to be the rights of parties, without this distribution importing a conclusive adjudication on those rights which may be subsequently readjusted by a suit such as the present."

This does not, in our opinion, mean that an order passed by a Court under s. 73, Civil P. O. is not a judicial order and we entirely agree with the remark of Ramesam,

(1) 28 I. A. 203; 23 A. 313; 3 Bom. L. R. 713; 8 Sar. 72; 5 O. W. N. 649 (P. O.).

J. in Salai Muhammad Haji Ibrahim & Co. v. Ayja Nadar (A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 944) (2) that :

"There is a fallacy in passing from the noun to the adjective in this manner."

As pointed out by the learned Judge, all the orders of Courts under the Indian Succession Act, the Probate and Administration Act, etc., relating to the administration of the assets of deceased persons are in a sense administrative but it cannot reasonably be contended that they are not judicial orders. We are supported in this view by S. A. S. Chettyar Firm v. S. A. R. A. M. Firm 6 Rangoon 582 (3) also.

The next contention of the learned Counsel is that there was no failure on the part of the District Judge to exercise jurisdiction vested in him by law nor the exercise of that jurisdiction in an illegal or irregular manner and he has referred us to some cases in which it was held that a High Court is not justified in exercising its revisional powers merely on the ground that the order passed by the Court below seems to be erroneous. We think, however, that so far at least as the Lyallpur Bank is concerned, if it be held that the Bank is entitled to a rateable share of the assets, it must also be held that the learned Judge failed to exercise jurisdiction that was vested in him by law.

The third argument is that this Court's jurisdiction under s. 115 Civil P. O. is discretionary and that it should not be exercised in favour of persons who have under s. 73 (2), Civil P. O. a remedy by way of suit. In support of the contention that revision should not be allowed where there is another remedy open to the applicant, reliance has been placed on the cases of Har Narain Sethi v. Bird & Co. (1936 O. W. N. 116), (4), Birendra Bikram Singh v. Basdeo (1936 O. W. N. 262), (5), Mst. Burmoori Begam v. Mst. Aysha (5 Patna Law Journal 415) (6), Chivarkula Sheetharamayya v. Mulpuru Rathamma (A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 399) (7), Venkataraman v. Mahalingayyan (I. L. R. 9 Mad. 508) (8), Ram

Saran Das v. Amar Nath (A. I. R. 1935 Lahore, 971) (9) and Behari Lal v. Ale Nahi (1936 A. I. J. 559) (10). These cases no doubt support the learned Counsel's contention to a certain extent, but with all respect we think that it is not and should not be an invariable rule that revision should not be entertained whenever there is another remedy open to the party, for there seems to be no warrant for this either in s. 115 or in any other provision of the Civil P. O. In Lila v. Mahange (I. L. R. 54 All. 183) (11) it was held that it cannot be laid down as a general proposition that the High Court has no power of interference at all and should not interfere where there is another remedy by way of a suit open to the applicant. In Mst. Bhacwanti v. Sant Singh (A. I. R. 1939 Lahore 52) (12) the Lahore High Court also held that there is no inflexible rule that the High Court will not interfere in revision when other remedy is open by way of a suit and that the High Court even in such cases can interfere in revision to avoid multiplicity of a litigation and hardship to the parties. In the case of Bachu Lal v. Ram Din (1938 A. L. J. 1118) (13) the High Court at Allahabad again held that the power of the High Court to interfere in revision with an order passed under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. O. is not precluded by the fact that a remedy by way of a suit is open to the applicant under r. 63. The case of Konchadu Dalayya v. Malla Sundara Narayana (I. L. R. 59 Mad. 303) (14) was a case under s. 73, Civil P. O. and it was held that where the High Court is satisfied that the lower Court has proceeded on a clear misapprehension of s. 73 of the Code, it is not justified in driving the petitioner to a separate suit merely on the ground that that remedy is also open to him. We are, therefore, of opinion that the mere fact that a remedy by way of a suit is open to the applicants in the present case should not lead us to hold that the applications for revision are not entertainable. We accordingly overrule the preliminary objection.

Coming now to the merits of the applications, we take up the application of the Lyallpur Bank first. It appears that an order under s. 186 of the Indian Companies Act was obtained against Jai Ram Das by the Lyallpur Bank from the Court of the District Judge, Lahore, on March 27, 1935. On January 10, 1936, an application for execution of the order was made to the District Judge, Lahore, and proceedings were subsequently transferred to Unao in this province. The learned District Judge was of opinion that an order under s. 186 of the Indian Companies Act, cannot be regarded as a decree within the meaning of s. 73, Civil P. O. We have carefully considered the arguments advanced on behalf of the Lyallpur Bank against this finding but are unable to hold that the finding of the learned Judge was wrong. The learned Counsel has relied on the cases of In the matter of the Indian Companies Act (A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 271) (15) and Tharya Ram v. Popat Ram (47 Ind. Cas. 997) (16) but neither of these cases supports the contention that an order passed under s. 186 of the Indian Companies Act can be deemed to be a decree within the meaning of s. 73, Civil P. O. In the first of these cases the Official Liquidator had applied directly to the District Court in Madras within whose jurisdiction the property against which the enforcement of the order was sought was situated though the order under s. 186 of the Indian Companies Act had been passed by the Bombay High Court. All that was decided was that the proper procedure under ss. 199 and 200 of the Companies Act was that the order should be filed in the High Court and the High Court should treat it in the same manner as a decree passed by itself and transfer it for execution to the District Court. In the latter case the question was whether the assignee of an order under s. 186 of the Companies Act can enforce the order in his favour without complying with the requirements of O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. O. and it was held that ss. 199 and 200 of the Companies Act do not override the provisions of the Civil P. O. No question under s. 73, Civil P. O. arose in either of these cases and they are, therefore, no authority for the proposition that a person holding an order under s. 186 of the Companies Act can be given rateable distribution under s. 73 of the Code. On the other hand Courts in India have taken the view that an order under the Companies Act is not a decree as defined in the Civil P. O. In Modern Chemical Works, Ltd. v. Manmohan Nath Dar (A. I. R. 1935 Lahore, 975) (17) it was clearly laid down that an order made by a liquidation Court is not a decree though it is enforceable in the same manner as if it were a decree. In A Reference under Section 28 of Act No. VII of 1870 (I. L. R. 17 All. 238) (18) also it was held that an order under s. 214 of the Indian Companies Act of 1882 is not a decree or an order having the force of a decree. The case of Mohan Lal Lal Chand v. Bhivraj Devchand (A. I. R. 1934 Nagpur 243) (19) is still stronger and was a case under s. 73, Civil P. O. It was held in that case that s. 73 only permits application for rateable distribution by persons who have made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money and not by persons who have obtained orders for payment of money which are capable of being executed, and that persons in whose favour orders for payment of money are passed, do not stand on the same footing as persons who have obtained "decrees" for the payment of money so as to entitle them to the benefit of s. 73, Civil P. O.

We are therefore, of opinion that the learned District Judge was right in holding that the Lyallpur Bank is not entitled to rateable distribution in the present case. The application of the Lyallpur Bank, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

We now take up the application of the representatives-in-interest of Ramji Das, applicant-deceased.

Ramji Das obtained a decree for Rs. 35,400 and costs from the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lahore against Jai Ram Das on February 2, 1928. On November 25, 1935, he applied for issue of a precept to the Subordinate Judge of Unao for attachment of the decree standing in favour of Jai Ram Das on the basis of the award dated December 4, 1935, referred to above. On January 15, 1936, application was made by Ramji Das to the Subordinate Judge of Unao for execution. The learned Subordinate Judge on return from leave on January 17, 1936, made an order of attachment of the money deposited in the District Judge's Court. On February 3, 1936, the Subordinate Judge passed an order that the money attached be sent for from the Court of the District Judge but as in the meantime various decree-holders had applied to the District Judge for execution of their decrees against Jai Ram Das, the learned District Judge refused to send the money to the Subordinate Judge's Court on that ground. It appears from the report put up by the office of the District Judge on February 4, 1936, that the money in his Court had already been attached in another case of the Subordinate Judge's Court and in two cases of the District Judge's own Court.

The learned Counsel for the applicants in application No. 191 has challenged the learned District Judge's order on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to make an order of rateable distribution under s. 73, Civil P. O. and the cases of Kamini Kumar Chowdhury v. Sasanka Sekhar Chowdhury (37 O. W. N. 820) (20) and E. M. Visvanadhan Chetty v. Arunchelam Chetti, (I. L. R. 44 Mad. 100) (21) have been relied on in support of this contention. No doubt these cases hold that the custody Court which holds money under O. XXI, r. 52, Civil P. O. cannot proceed under s. 73 of the Code, but long before the date on which the present order was passed by the learned District Judge, viz., August 6, 1936, his Court had ceased to be a custody Court under r. 52 and had become an execution Court by reason of various applications for execution being filed in it. He was, therefore, perfectly competent to award rateable distribution.

The learned Counsel argues that as Ramji Das was the first to apply for execution of his decree, he was entitled to full satisfaction of his decree and that the balance, if any, should have been distributed to the other decree-holders. We see no force in this argument. The Court of the District Judge became vested with powers under s. 73 as soon as it became an execution Court by an application for execution being presented to it. Ramji Das's application was transferred by the Subordinate Judge to the District Judge for execution on March 20, 1936, but we have seen that applications for execution were presented to the District Judge before February 5, 1936, in fact, in view of this fact we doubt if Ramji Das was entitled at all to a share in the assets held by the District Judge; but as none of the parties has contested the learned District Judge's order awarding a rateable share to Ramji Das, we are not called upon to interfere with the order passed in his favour. What is perfectly certain is that Ramji Das was not entitled to get his decree fully satisfied out of the assets. His application also, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Miscellaneous Appeal No. 81 of 1935

NAGPUR—APPELLANT

versus

RAMOHANDRA—RESPONDENT

C. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1922), s. 84 (3)— Suit in Civil Court for refund of taxes paid, when barred.

It is the duty of the Municipal Committee to assess each house, to decide who is the owner or occupier liable to assessment, and to recover that assessment. Whether that assessment has been correctly calculated or not or whether it is being levied on the right person is a matter for the Municipal Committee to decide, and it cannot be said that its action is ultra vires if it decides it wrongly. An assessee has a right of appeal under s. 83 of the C. P. Municipalities Act, and under s. 84 (3) no objection shall be taken to any assessment or levy nor shall the liability of any person to be assessed or taxed be questioned in any other manner or by any other authority than is provided in this Act. According to s. 85 (4), no refund of any tax shall be claimable by any person otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Act and the rules made thereunder. Unless the allegations in the plaint show that the action of the Committee was ultra vires, no civil suit will lie for a refund of the taxes paid. 18 Ind. Cas. 449 (1) and 65 Ind. Cas. 332 (2), distinguished.

Misc. A. from an order of the Court of the Third Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated January 26, 1938.

Dr. W. S. Barlinge, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. R. Deopujary, for the Respondent.

Order.—This is an appeal by the Municipal Committee of Nagpur arising out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover certain money which he alleges was illegally recovered from him as taxes by the Committee. The plaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner of house No. 16 and he paid the municipal taxes assessed on it up to 1935 but in spite of this, an additional sum of Rs. 86 was recovered from him on this account on February 21, 1935. The plaintiff further alleges that Rs. 118-12-3 was recovered from him, apparently on the same date, as taxes assessed on house Nos. 253-1, 254-1, 254-2 and 254-4 which he never owned. Subsequently the defendant admitted that he was the owner of houses Nos. 253-1, 254-1 and 254-2 and alleged that he had paid the taxes due on these houses but denied that he was the owner of house No. 254-4 and alleged that Rs. 118-12-3 had been recovered as a tax on this latter house. The pleadings show that what the plaintiff alleges was a double recovery was in fact a recovery of the balance due on account of re-assessment. The trial Court held that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts was barred by s. 84 (3) of the C. P. Municipalities Act. The lower Appellate Court has held that the jurisdiction is not barred. Against that decision the Municipal Committee has appealed.

I have been referred to the decisions in G. I. P. Ry. Company v. Amraoti Municipality (1) and Municipal Committee, Malkapur v. A. W. Dalal (2). In the first of these cases, the plaintiffs sought to recover a sum which they said was illegally levied from them by the defendants as a tax on their trade as a carrier. Stanyon, A. J. O. pointed out that the first point to be decided was whether on the allegations of the plaintiffs the Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit and he held that, as it was alleged that the action of the Municipal Committee was ultra vires, the Civil Courts had jurisdiction to try that issue. In the second case there was an allegation that the Municipal Committee had levied a tax on a professional income arising outside the municipal limits which was contrary to law. The facts in the present case are entirely different. It is the duty of the Municipal Committee to assess each house, to decide who is the owner or occupier liable to assessment, and to recover that assessment. Whether that assessment has been correctly calculated or not or whether it is being levied on the right person is a matter for the Municipal Committee to decide, and it cannot be said that its action is ultra vires.

if it decides it wrongly. An assessee has a right of appeal under s. 83 of the Act, and under s. 84 (3), no objection shall be taken to any assessment or levy nor shall the liability of any person to be assessed or taxed be questioned in any other manner or by any other authority than is provided in this Act. Section 85 (2) provides that no refund of any tax shall be claimable by any person otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Act and the rules made thereunder. There were no allegations in the pleadings to show that the Municipal Committee was acting ultra vires, and therefore no civil suit will lie for a refund of the taxes paid.

The appeal is allowed and the suit will stand dismissed with costs throughout. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

Custom (Punjab)—Jalaps—Succession—Batadar son, whether can succeed with ordinary sons collaterally.

Among Jalaps, a Batadar son, that is, a son by a mother of an inferior tribe can succeed equally with ordinary sons collaterally, although such a son does not succeed equally in the case of paternal inheritance.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated April 11, 1938.

Mr. Asad Ullah Khan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohsin Shah, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The question of custom arising for decision in this appeal is whether among Jalaps a batadar son, that is, a son by a mother of an inferior tribe would succeed equally with ordinary sons collaterally. It is clear enough according to the riwaj-i-am, that in this tribe a batadar son does not succeed equally in the case of paternal inheritance. The Courts below, however, refused to extend the disadvantage of the batadar son in the paternal inheritance beyond the paternal inheritance and have allowed him to succeed equally in the case of collateral succession. A certificate has been given by the learned District Judge.

The evidence is only oral on the side of the appellants and curiously enough none of the witnesses could produce any instance of a batadar son having been excluded from collateral succession. The learned Counsel for the respondent, however, has drawn my attention to the answer to question No. 65 as given in the vernacular record upon which the English record is admittedly based, as stated in the preface. In question No. 65 the point was whether there was any difference in succession to brothers based on uterine descent. Some of the tribes, who recognized this batadari custom, appeared to have continued it in the case of succession to brothers to varying degrees. No specific mention is made of the Jalap tribe but the last answer is baqi bashara gaum Jat. The baqi, in my opinion, clearly applies to all the tribes that are not specifically mentioned above and the answer of the Jats is that there is no difference made between various brothers. It would therefore follow that the riwaj-i-am is in favour of the batadar son on the question of succession to brothers. I am unable to see any difference between that succession and collateral succession to more distant kindred. In fact the case of brothers is only a specific instance of collateral succession. It would follow, therefore, that the onus lay on the defendants to prove that the batadar son was excluded from collateral succession. I consider that they have failed to do so and I therefore uphold the judgment of the Courts below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1—“Value of subject-matter in dispute,” meaning of—Appeal on merits also challenging order of costs independently—Value of subject-matter of appeal is total amount of value of subject-matter in suit and amount of costs challenged.

The words “value of the subject-matter in dispute” in Art. 1, Sch. I, Court Fees Act refer, where the Court is concerned with a suit, to the value of the subject-matter of the suit, and where it is concerned with an appeal then these words refer to the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal. The subject-matter of the suit and the subject-matter of the appeal may not be the same. Where the appellant appeals against the decree in a suit on merits and also challenges the order of costs independently, then the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal is the total amount consisting of the value of the subject-matter in the suit and the amount of costs challenged. Doorga Doss Chowdhury v. Ramanauth Chowdhury (1), distinguished, Debendro Mohan Rai v. Sona Kuar (3), In re Makki (4) and 3 Ind. Cas. 534 (5), relied on.

F. O. A. against the order of the Sessions and Civil Judge, Lucknow, dated December 13, 1937.

Mr. Bijay Shankar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. L. Nigam, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—In this appeal the appellants valued the appeal at Rs. 5,100, and as the reliefs claimed in the trial Court were of a declaratory nature, they paid the court-fee of Rs. 30. In ground No. 11 of their appeal, the appellants took an independent objection as regards costs which had been awarded against them personally. Their contention in appeal is that the costs should have come out of the estate. The Chief Inspector of Stamps has reported that the appellants must pay court-fee under Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Court Fees Act at the amount of costs-challenged, i.e., a sum of Rs. 550-11-0. He has reported that there is a deficiency of Rs. 52-3-0 which the appellants must make good.

This report is contested by the learned Counsel for the appellants. His contention is that under Sch. I, Art. 1, the subject-matter in dispute means the subject-matter of dispute in the suit itself and does not include the costs. Reliance has been placed for this proposition upon Doorga Doss Chowdhury v. Ramanauth Chowdhury, reported in 8 Moore's Indian Appeals 262 (1). Their Lordships in that case were concerned with a different provision of law altogether. They held that in order to reach the appealable value for an appeal to the Privy Council, costs awarded to the successful party cannot be included in the value of the subject-matter of the appeal. The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, shows that there was no specific ground of appeal attacking the order of costs and the appellant wanted to add the costs only for the purpose of making up the appealable value. In our opinion this case has absolutely no application to the facts of this case. In our opinion, the words “value of the subject-matter in dispute” in Art. 1 refer, where we are concerned with a suit, to the value of the subject-matter of the suit, and where we are concerned with an appeal, then these words refer to the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal. The subject-matter of the suit and the subject-matter of the appeal may not be the same. Where the appellant appeals against the decree in a suit on merits and also challenges the order of costs independently, then the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal is the total amount consisting of the value of the subject-matter in the suit and the amount of costs challenged.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has further relied upon a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Kamal Kumari Debi v. Rangpur North Bengal Bank, Ltd. (A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 55) (2). In this case the learned Judge seems to have gone entirely upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to above, which, in our opinion, has no application to the facts of the present case. The learned Judge has not followed the cases in Debendro Mohan Rai v. Sona Kuar, (1901 All. W. N. 21) (3) and In re Makki, (I. L. R. 19 Madras, 350) (4), on the ground that they were not well-considered judgments. The cases of the Allahabad and Madras High Courts referred to above accord with our view which we have taken of the meaning of Sch. I, Art. 1 of the Court Fees Act.

We were referred particularly to a decision of this Court in Kewal Singh v. Makrand Singh, (reported in 12 Oudh Cases, 171) (5), in which it was held that where apart from and independently of any other relief which the appellant seeks, he seeks distinct relief on the ground that the costs of the parties have not been properly assessed or apportioned, then the value of that distinct relief should be reckoned as part of the subject-matter in dispute for the purpose of the First Schedule of the Court Fees Act. The learned Counsel for the appellants has sought to distinguish this case on the ground that the appeal in the case related to costs only. In our opinion the principle of that case supports the report of the Chief Inspector of Stamps and the distinction sought to be made by the learned Counsel for the appellants is immaterial. We, therefore, accept the report of the Chief Inspector of Stamps and order the appellants to make good the deficiency of Rs. 52-8-0 within three weeks from to-day.

Abatement—Partial—Appeal—Partition suit decreed—Appeal by all defendants—Decree and grounds of appeal proceeding on grounds common to all—Death of one appellant—Others can continue appeal under O. XLI, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908).

In a partition suit no effective decree can be made unless all the co-sharers are before the Court. It does not, however, follow that a suit for partition cannot be dismissed against an absent defendant. In an appeal from a decree which proceeds on grounds common to all the appellants if there is partial abatement owing to the death of some of them, the surviving appellants may continue the whole appeal. Where the decree appealed from is of such a nature that the hearing of the appeal after partial abatement may result in the passing of two inconsistent decrees, the whole appeal must fail.

Where a decree in a partition suit is challenged in appeal by all the defendants and the decree proceeds on grounds common to them all and so also are their grounds of appeal, on the death of one of the appellants, the survivors are entitled to the benefit of O. XLI, r. 4, Civil P. C., and can continue the appeal without the legal representative of the deceased being substituted. PRAHLAD CHANDRA SINGH v. BHIM MAHATO Pat. 685

Administration—Letters of administration will annexed obtained by person—Presumption that all legacies have not been paid.

a The mere fact that a person has obtained letters of administration with will annexed is no evidence to prove that the estate must be assumed to have been still unadministered nor that the Court should presume that all the legacies or at least the legacy in favour of such person has not been paid in accordance with the tenor of the will. INDU PROVA DEBI Pat. 86

Mortgage by legatee of immovable property before obtaining assent of executor—Validity.

Where a legatee under a will mortgages an immovable property left to him by the testator before obtaining the assent of the executor to the legacy, the property can form the subject-matter of a valid mortgage, and the mortgagee is entitled to cut off the equity of redemption. The reason for the rule is that although the legatees have no property in the legacies by the devise until the assent of the executor is obtained, they have an interest in them which is capable of being transferred. In other words, though on the assent of the executor, the full title passes to the legatee, the assent creates no new title; it merely perfects the title acquired under the will. INDU PROVA DEBI v. DURGA CHARAN MITRA Pat. 86.

Residue, how ascertained.

There is no residue of personal estate until after payment of the debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and all costs of the administration of the estate of the testator. Therefore until the costs are paid, the net residue cannot be arrived at, at all. INDU PROVA DEBI v. DURGA CHARAN MITRA Pat. 86.

Transferees in possession of property—Remedy of legatee to recover his specific share.

If the testator left no other property than the property in suit, it is always open to the legatee to recover his specific legacy, if he brings an appropriate action and there is no other obstacle by way of limitation or otherwise in his way, by suing for the amount from the persons in possession of the property of the testator as transferees. The transferees of the residuary legatee or the residuary legatees are always liable to have the property in their possession reduced to a proper extent in order to re-pay the specific legatees. INDU PROVA DEBI v. DURGA CHARAN MITRA Pat. 86.

Adverse possession—Co-sharers—Essentials.

To constitute a title by adverse possession in or co-owner as against another, there must be ouster or exclusion; there must be a disclaimer by the one of other's title by open assertion of a hostile title. It is not sufficient to show acts of possession; the possession required must be adequate in continuity or publicity and in extent, to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor. MANGAI MAL AGANMAL v. MOSAMMAD USIF BORO Sind 1

Plea of—If can be entertained in appeal.

Where the question of adverse possession was not pleaded nor decided in the Court below, depending as it does on questions of facts, it cannot be entertained in appeal. KUMAR RAGHAVA SURENDRA SAE v. BABUL LACHMI KOER Pat. 17

Possession of wrong-doer, nature of—Hypothetical right, whether heritable and transferable—Possession after his death by heir, if on behalf of all heirs.

The possession of a wrong-doer held for a term less than the period of limitation is a good title against the whole world with the exception of the true owner. This possessory right even though has not ripened into ownership by lapse of time.

Adverse possession—conold.

statutory period, is a right in immovable property which is heritable and transmissible according to w. The possession continued by some of his heirs could be regarded as possession on behalf of the whole unless and until it is shown that there is an collusion or ouster of the other co-sharers. Mere exclusive possession by a co-sharer is not sufficient to extinguish the rights of the other co-sharers unless and until definite ouster is found. KIRABALI ANIL BHARY DUTTA Cal. 408

—Widow—Adverse possession against widow, whether affects reversioner's rights

The adverse possession, howsoever long held, cannot impair the right of a person who was not, during the continuance of that adverse possession, entitled to possession. The right of the reversioner is spes successionis and his reversionary estate falls into possession only on the death of the intermediate owner, namely, the widow. Consequently the adverse possession against the widow can hardly be recorded as hostile to the reversioners whose right was until the widow's death only an expectancy. PANNALAL v. SUMANLAL Nag. 108

Such proprietors of a mahal who have a voice in the appointment of a lambardar or of a patwari do take part in the administration of the affairs of the mahal. The vendees who have a voice in the appointment of the patwari and the lambardar of mahal cannot, therefore, be regarded "petty proprietors" as defined by the Agra Pre-emption Act and they must, therefore, be held to be co-sharers as defined by the Act. *CHIRANJI LAL v. —Second appeal, if lies from appellate order of Revenue Court in execution proceedings—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100.

The provision of the Civil P. C., by which orders passed under s. 47 amount to decrees is not applicable to proceedings in the Revenue Courts under the Agra Tenancy Act. No second appeal, therefore, lies against an appellate order passed in execution proceedings by a Revenue Court. JANNATUN-NISSA BEGAM v. PARSHADI All. 808 —ss. 44, 242 (3) (a)—Suit under s. 41 by person alleging himself to be zemindar—Defendant admitting plaintiff to be proprietor and himself to be thekadar—Question of proprietary rights, whether in issue in suit—Appeal, whether lies to Commissioner or to District Judge.

Under the Agra Tenancy Act, a lease is hardly a transfer of proprietary interest in land, for the Act speaks of leases by landholders to tenants and by tenants to sub-tenants. Even a thekadar has been defined as a farmer or other lessee of proprietary rights and not as a transferee of proprietary rights in some form or another. Although a thekadar is not expressly included in the definition of tenant, the provisions relating to tenants apply in the majority of cases to thekadars as well. It will, therefore, be inappropriate to say that, when in a suit under s. 41 a defendant admits that the plaintiff is the proprietor of the holding and the defendant is a thekadar, a question of proprietary right is in issue between the plaintiff and the defendant claiming such right. Hence an appeal from the decision in the suit lies to the Commissioner

The collecting co-sharer is entitled to retain out of what he has collected from a tenant only a share proportionate to his share in the khewat. He is only entitled to appropriate from his realizations an amount proportionate to his share in the khewat.

The right conferred by s. 227, Agra Tenancy Act, is not affected by the fact that the co-sharer who has collected has not acted as the agent of the co-sharer who is seeking to recover his share of the profits. The co-sharer who has collected is liable to account and the extent of his liability is not dependent upon whether he acted in his individual capacity or as agent in making collections. *MAN SINGH v. Appeal—Abatement—Setting aside of—Held, sufficient cause was shown for setting aside abatement.

The critical question in deciding whether an abatement should be set aside is whether sufficient cause has been shown and that is a matter for decision on the facts of each case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what constitutes sufficient cause.

An application for setting aside the abatement of the appeal was made by the appellant on the ground that his law agent who was in charge of the appeal was neither living in the village nor had any touch with the village where the deceased respondent lived and that he came to know of the death of respondent only after several months from his death:

Held, that sufficient cause was made out for setting aside the abatement. RAM RANBIJAYA PRASAD SINGH v. MADHO TURBA Pat. 498

The objector by his objection having invited the Court to decide the matter between him and the decree-holder only, cannot subsequently raise an objection that the decree-holder should have impleaded other parties in appeal. *SARJU PRASAD v. Arbitration—Arbitrator—Power of, to allow amendment of plaint refused by Court before referring suit to arbitration.

Where an entire suit has been referred to arbitration, the arbitrator has power to allow amendment of plaint in respect of certain wrong date mentioned in it even if such an amendment had been refused by the Court before reference to arbitration. TRIPATI MARWARI v. KHDARNATH HIMAT-SINGHA Pat. 273

Commissioner to effect partition and arbitrator—Distinction.

The essential difference between a Commissioner appointed to effect a partition and an arbitrator is that the former is an officer selected and appointed by the Court, in whose selection the parties have not, as of right, any choice, whereas the latter is a person selected by the parties in whose selection the Court has no choice. In the former case the parties have expressed no consent to be bound by the decision of the Commissioner who is appointed by the Court and whose decision the parties may challenge before the Court passing a final decree. In the latter case they have expressed such consent and cannot challenge the arbitrator's decision on questions of law and fact except on the limited grounds mentioned in Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code. RADHEY LAL v. KANHAI LAL Pat. 52

Assignment—Decree—Assignment of, after its passing but before it is drawn up—Validity—Whether carries with it right to decree passed in appeal.

The assignment of a decree is nothing more than an assignment of the rights conferred by the decree. These rights are acquired as soon as the decree is passed or pronounced and cannot be made dependent on the preparation of the decree which is more or less a ministerial act. As the Civil P. O. provides in O. XX, r. 7, that the decree shall bear the date on which the judgment is pronounced, the decree must, in the eye of law, be presumed to have come into existence on the date on which the judgment was pronounced. The assignment of a decree after the judgment is pronounced but before the decree is drawn up is, therefore, valid.

When a decree is assigned, what is transferred is not the decree itself but the interest of the decree-holder in the decree as may be finally determined and therefore the assignment of a decree carries with it the right to the decree passed in appeal. RAM KUMAR RAM SHRAFF v. MOHAN LAL MAHARAJ

Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII of 1936), ss. 2 (8), 34—Debt payable under decree of original side of High Court, whether debt within meaning of Act—Proceedings in respect of such debt, if can be stayed under s. 34.

The expression "Civil Court" as used in the various sections of the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act means a Court of civil jurisdiction separate from and subordinate to the High Court and does not include High Court. The expression "or otherwise", in s. 2 (8) means debt not founded on a decree, and even if it includes decretal debts, they would be decrees passed by other Courts, e. g., the Revenue Court, but not by the High Court. Hence, a debt payable under the decree of the original side of the High Court would not be a debt within the meaning of the Agricultural Debtors Act. It would not be within the competence of the Debt Settlement Board constituted under the Act to settle such debts, and no proceeding in respect of the same could be stayed by a notice under s. 34. Much the same result would be produced even if the view that the expression "Civil Court" includes the High Court is accepted. The assumption of jurisdiction by the Debt Settlement Board over debts payable under decrees of the High Court, is ultra vires and it was outside the competence of the Legislature to include a liability based upon a decree of the High Court within the definition of a debt as given in s. 2 (8), Agricultural Debtors Act. *TARAK NATH KUNDU v. The definition of "debt" found in s. 2 (8), Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act includes "secured and unsecured" liabilities. All mortgage debts are secured liabilities, although in a simple mortgage there is a personal liability flowing from the covenant to pay while in a mortgage by conditional sale, there is no such covenant and consequently there is no personal liability. Consequently, a debt secured by mortgage by conditional sale is a debt within the meaning of s. 34, Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act. ABDUL LALIF v. ABDUL GANI SHRAFF Cal. 393

Under s. 78, Land Registration Act, the right to the rent of an estate being in the proprietor, although not registered, his right to sue for the rent is not taken away; but this section merely puts an impediment in the way of his realising the rent until he had complied with the law by obtaining registration of his name as proprietor.

The status of a co-sharer landlord who has purchased an occupancy holding is not the status of a raiyat but a peculiar status, his right is that of a proprietor entitled to retain possession of the land subject to payment to his co-proprietors of their shares of the rent. The status is a peculiar status which attaches to the co-sharer so long as he remains a co-sharer. If he ceases to be a co-sharer and his proprietary interest is lost, then he has no right to retain possession of the land and it would pass on to the person who acquires the interest of that co-sharer. The person who has acquired such interest is entitled to sub-let the same to another person who thereupon becomes a raiyat of the holding. SUKHDIO PANDHY v. RAMSHEWAR PRASAD AGARWALA Pat. 557

s. 26-F—Pre-emption proceeding against minor, if void.

The effect of a decree passed against a minor in a suit in which he is not properly represented is a nullity so far as he is concerned. But to say that the decree is absolutely void and a mere waste piece of paper is to go a good deal further than this. A minor is certainly not bound to treat it as a nullity if he does not desire to do so, and third persons cannot be heard to say that it is void.

There is no real analogy between a decree of a Civil Court and an order passed in the proceedings under s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act. The order for pre-emption in no way corresponds to a decree and the section really does nothing more than provide a convenient machinery for giving effect to the claim to pre-empt.

Where the minor purchaser form a raiyat describes himself in the kobala as a major and the pre-emption proceedings are taken against him by the landlord under s. 26-F, an order obtained thereon is not void. DEBENDRA CHANDRA DE v. JAMINI KUMAR DEY Cal. 704

The Ben. Ten. Such an order is not also appealable under s. 96, Civil P. O., because the decree contemplated by s. 96 of the Code is a decree made in a suit. A proceeding under s. 26-G is started by an application and not by a plaint, and consequently the order under s. 26-G cannot be said to be an order in a suit. DIGAMBAR FONDA v. SATISH CHANDRA DAS Cal. 368

s. 26-G—Whether affects law of estoppel contained in Evidence Act (I of 1872)—Estoppel.

The Evi. Act is an existing Indian Statute falling in the Concurrent List in Sch. VII to the Govt. of India Act. The Amending Act which introduced s. 26-G was passed by the Provincial Legislature of Bengal and it did not receive the assent of the Governor-General-in-Council. Consequently, the Provincial Legislature never intended to affect the law of estoppel as contained in the Evi. Act. There is a presumption that a Legislature acts intra vires.

Where therefore relying on the representation of the petitioners that they were mokarari mourasi raiyats, the opposite party advances money to them on the mortgage of the tenancy, the petitioners are precluded thereafter from showing that they were occupancy tenants. *PRAFULLA KUMAR MAITY v. s. 106—Suit under—Plaintiff not admitting that he is out of possession—Whether can establish that possession of the other party is possession of his.

The determination of a question of bare title is outside the scope of a suit under s. 106, Ben. Ten. Act. A suit under that section relates to the Record of Rights and to the correction of the entries therein. A suit for the determination of a bare question of title divorced from possession is not one which falls within the purview of s. 106. But this does not mean that the Assistant Settlement Officer is not under any circumstances to consider questions involving the title of the rival parties. Where a plaintiff admits that he is out of possession and seeks to recover possession after a declaration of his title to the land, he cannot obtain these reliefs in a suit framed under s. 106, because such a suit would involve the determination of a question of bare title unaccompanied with possession. But where the plaintiff does not admit that he is out of possession of the land in suit, it is open to him to establish in a suit under s. 106, that the possession of the other party is really the possession of the plaintiff. *SECRETARY OF STATE v. The date to be mentioned by the Collector in the sale notification, which he is bound to publish under s. 55, Ben. Village Chaukidari Act must be taken to correspond with the latest day of payment to which reference is made in s. 3 of Revenue Sales Land Act XI of 1859. The date with effect from which the purchase takes effect must be the day after that fixed for the last day of payment. This date cannot possibly be the date upon which the requisition for sale is sent to the Collector by the collecting member of the panchayat under s. 54, Village Chaukidari Act. Consequently, if there is any entry in the sale certificate that the sale will take effect from the date on which the requisition under s. 54 was sent to the Collector, such an entry being clearly wrong, the onus clearly lies upon the purchaser to show what this date on which the sale is to take effect is. Where during the pendency of an appeal to the High Court against an order rejecting an application under s. 16, Bihar Money-lenders Act of 1938, the Amending Act of 1939 has come into force, s. 13 of the Amending Act applies to the application. — ss. 13, 14—Applicability—Whether apply where execution sale is completed before passing of Act.

There is nothing either in the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939, or in the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, to express the intention of the Legislature to invalidate a completed sale which was otherwise good. In order that ss. 13 and 14 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939, may be applicable, it is necessary that the execution should be still pending. On the sale of immovable property being confirmed, execution is complete. Hence where the execution sale has been completed before the passing of the above Act, ss. 13 and 14 of that Act have no application. CHUNNA BEGUM v. KISBUNDO NARAIN MAHTHA Pat. 404.

Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act (IX of 1938), s. 15—S. 15, if repugnant to any existing Indian Law—Whether applies to execution proceedings—Order of executing Court refusing to execute decree for amount mentioned in it and proceeding to execute it after reducing amount under s. 15, whether falls under s. 17, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)—Revision, if lies.

The Civil Procedure Code by itself does not apply to suits for rent. It is s. 143, Bihar Tenancy Act, which, with certain reservations, makes the Civil Procedure Code applicable to rent suits and the procedure and regulation of Rent Courts and Revenue Courts are exclusively within the purview of the Provincial Legislatures. It was quite open to the Provincial Legislature to amend s. 143, Bihar Tenancy Act, and provide new procedure for the trial of rent suits. If by implication they authorized the Court not to execute decrees beyond a certain sum specified in s. 15, Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act, they had full power to do so. Section 15, Bihar Restoration of Bakasht Lands and Reduction of Arrears of Rent Act, is not therefore repugnant to any existing law relating to the Concurrent List No. 3 of Sch. VII Government of India Act.

The directions given to Court in s. 15, apply to the proceeding for the execution of the decrees also.

Revisional powers are not exercised by the High Court in those cases in which a party entitled to appeal has not appealed. An order of the executing Court refusing to execute the decree for the sum which was mentioned in it and proceeding to execute it only after reducing it according to the direction given in s. 15 of Act IX of 1938 relates to a question of execution, satisfaction and discharge of decree and comes under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code, and is appealable and where no appeal has been preferred from such order revisional powers of the High Court cannot be invoked. *RAZAUER RAHMAN v. Bombay Borstal Schools Act (XVIII of 1929), ss. 6, 8—Previous convictions as evidence of criminal habits—Proof.

Where the evidence of criminal habits or tendencies from which it is to appear to the Court that it should take action under s. 6, Bombay Borstal Schools Act is that of previous convictions, the Court should require these previous convictions to be properly proved before it can say that there is evidence from which it can appear to the Court that the accused is of criminal habits or tendencies within the meaning of cl. (b) of s. 6. There is no difference in the standard of proof required for previous convictions, for the purpose of s. 75, Penal Code, or for the purpose of s. 6, Bombay Borstal Schools Act.

Where the only evidence of previous convictions is merely the extracts from the records of Central Bureau of Finger Prints and no certificate from Jail Officer or warrant of commitment is produced to prove it, on such evidence, the Court cannot take account of the previous convictions and cannot, consequently, take action under s. 6. *EMPEROR v. The powers of transfer conferred by s. 23 (5)

Bom. Civil Courts Act, on the Court are controlled by the provisions of s. 24, Civil P. O., and are necessarily limited to administrative orders allocating business. Hence, the order of transfer purporting to have been made under cl. (5) of s. 23, Bom. Civil Courts Act, after another Subordinate Judge has taken cognizance of the suit, is incompetent.

Where jurisdiction over the subject-matter exists requiring only to be invoked in the right way, the party, who has invoked or allowed the Court to exercise it in a wrong way, cannot afterwards turn round and challenge the legality of the proceedings.

Where therefore, the defect in the jurisdiction of the Court arises due to the irregularity in the commencement of the proceedings before the transferee Court and the parties lead evidence concurring in the Court's assumption of jurisdiction under a wrong order of transfer, the concurrence of the parties amounts to consent and their conduct is tantamount to a waiver of objection to jurisdiction. They cannot, therefore, subsequently object to jurisdiction.

The more appropriate form of remedy to set aside an order reversing a preliminary decree on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction, is by a civil revision application. AJAM IBBRAHIM MODAN v. BAI HAVA BIBI Bom. 813 purpose—Rules framed under ss. 213 and 214, r. 91—“Any holding... assessed”, meaning of.

The Bom. Land Revenue Code not only imposes a pecuniary burden on the subject, but restricts the use and enjoyment of his property. Such a statute must always be regarded as subject to the rule of strict construction. The proprietor is, therefore, entitled to ask the Court to construe it in his favour.

The character of the building or the amount of money spent upon its construction is immaterial in judging the purpose for which it is put eventually by the farmer.

The use of the words “farm-buildings, wells or tanks” in s. 65, Bom. Land Revenue Code does not exhaust but illustrates the kind of improvements intended by the Legislature to entitle the owner to the benefit of lesser assessment. The phrase “make any other improvements thereon for the better cultivation of the land” in s. 65 ought not to receive a narrow construction limited to some object directly connected with agricultural operations or the act of production merely. Any improvement which conduces to profitable husbandry and facilitates the marketing of agricultural produce, would be included within the class of improvements protected by s. 65. That would include the provision for store-houses made by an agriculturist for the protection of his agricultural produce until it leaves his farm. Thus, if grass as agricultural produce is cut, pressed, baled and stored in a godown with the object of eventually selling it when the market improves and it is profitable to sell the produce, the construction of such a godown which facilitates the object in question would be protected. The farmer produces his crops in order to sell the same and thus to provide the means to carry on further cultivation, that is, in other words, the business of framing or cultivation. Thus the use of the land being for agricultural purpose, its proprietor is not liable to non-agricultural assessment merely because he previously intended to use it for non-agricultural purpose, as the mere intention to use the property for non-agricultural purpose without its actually being so used will not enable the Govt. to alter the agricultural assessment.

The expression “any holding which has been assessed” implies “legally assessed.” When therefore the basis for altered assessment fails, the levy of altered assessment would be illegal. RAJCHAND GULABCHAND ACHJA v. SECRETARY OF STATE Bom 495

But other co-sharers who are not recognized as managing inamdars cannot file a suit or seek assistance against the khatedars directly. Once a bill is presented with "the least practicable delay" as required by s. 104, sub-s. (1) of the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, the right to issue a notice of demand and then to recover the amount by a distress warrant under s. 105 accrues to the Municipality, and that right is not lost by lapse of time. Section 105 does not prescribe any period of limitation, nor does it say, like s. 104, that the distress warrant should be issued with the least practicable delay. The periods of limitation prescribed for filing a suit under the Lim. Act govern the procedure in a Court of law, and the powers of the municipality acting under the provisions of ss. 104 and 105 are not governed by the Lim. Act. The fact that the remedy of the municipality to recover the amount by filing a suit in a Civil Court under s. 203 is time-barred cannot prevent it from exercising the special powers conferred upon it by the Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act. SURAT BOROUGH MUNICIPALITY v. Section 4, Bom. Prev. of Adul. Act, does not apply only to the sale of ghee simply as such but applies also to the sale of articles of food of which it is a necessary ingredient. The words of the section are wide enough to include articles of food which contain ghee mixed with other substance.

The fact that this ghee was taken from a shop where sweetmeats and pakorae were offered for sale, and indeed from a frying-pan in which other sweetmeats and pakorae were being made, makes it quite clear that the presumption apart, the admission of the accused himself apart, the sweetmeats and pakorae in his shop had been manufactured for sale within the meaning of s. 4 (1) (b) of the Act and that he was manufacturing and offering for sale sweetmeats and pakorae as containing pure ghee which contained the alleged impure ghee. NEHBANDAS HOLLARAM v. As the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act now stands, and in particular in view of the provisions of s. 13 it is clear that if a game is played for stakes, it amounts to gaming and comes within the mischief of the Act, quite irrespective of the question whether chance or skill predominates, provided of course that it is not a game of mere skill, that is to say, a game in which there is no element of chance at all. Of course, if the element of chance in a game is so small as to be negligible, it may be reasonable to ignore it. An injunction against Govt. to pay the plaintiff direct, and not to pay the superior holder, would be contrary to the spirit, if not to the express terms, of the Land Revenue Code. Burma Municipal Act (III of 1898), s. 8—Rules under, r. 68-A—Government coming to conclusion that no proper election took place and ordering new election—Candidates declared elected in original election, if can get declaration that orders of Government were ultra vires.

Shortly after a Municipal Election a candidate brought a petition against those who were thought to have been the successful candidates and to have been elected upon the Municipal Committee, alleging many acts of irregularities. The consequence of this petition was that the irregularities came to the notice of the Govt. which held that the proceedings of the election were a farce and a fiasco. Consequently they proceeded under r. 68 made under s. 8, Burma Municipal Act for the preparation and publication of the electoral roll for holding a proper election. The Judge who decided the petition held, reviewing all the matters, that the objections raised in the petition were valid, and he pointed out that all the criticisms made in regard to the electoral roll were correct. Upon that it was thought that the next four persons who were on the list in having received votes during these proceedings ought to be elected. The person so declared elected sued for a declaration that the orders of the Govt. and the electoral authority were ultra vires and that they were duly elected members of the Municipal Committee.

Held, that once an election had taken place the Govt. could not declare it to be void and hold a new one. But the authorities must make a decision upon the facts as represented to them and must make their decision in good faith. When they were apprised of the existence of facts as the result of an inquiry, in which evidence as to those facts was relevant, they might be assisted by the examination of the tribunal's opinion and the record of the evidence before it. Where after due notice to minor creditor and his guardian the Board and the debtor failed to have a proper guardian appointed, the proceedings are initially illegal and if this has resulted in failure to submit a statement of debt due to minor, the minor is gravely prejudiced. C. P. Protection of Debtors Act (IV of 1937), ss. 3, 4—"Molestation"—Creditor demanding payment of debt—Debtor becoming angry and bidding him go to Civil Court—Creditor losing temper beating debtor with shoe and leaving the place—Creditor, if can be punished under s. 4.

The terms of the definition of "molestation" given s. 3, C. P. Protection of Debtors Act, indicate that the obstruction or using violence or intimidation to constitute molestation should be accompanied by the intent to cause the debtor to abstain from doing what he has a right to do or to compel him to do what he has a right to abstain from doing. It is evident that the particular intent is a question of fact in every case. If the Court holds that the creditor's intention in obstructing, or using violence to, or intimidating, the debtor is to compel him to pay a debt which he has a right in certain circumstances to abstain from doing, the creditor's act would amount to molestation.

The creditor demanded payment of his debt, from his debtor, whereupon the latter became angry and bade him go to Civil Court. The creditor lost his temper and beat the debtor with a shoe and left the place. The creditor was prosecuted for an offence punishable under s. 4 of the C. P. Protection of Debtors Act, 1937, for molesting the debtor for the recovery of a debt owed by him:

Held, that the circumstances in which the creditor used violence did not warrant any assumption that the creditor's intention was to compel him to pay the debt. But on the contrary its effect would presumably be to confirm the debtor's resolve not to pay. Here the creditor did not resort to violence as an instrument to compel the debtor to pay when he was not disposed to pay. It was only a manifestation of the pitch of his passion that was aroused by the debtor's remark that the creditor should look to Civil Court. But the creditor was indeed liable to be punished for assault under the I. P. C. LAXMAN v. EMPEROR Nag. 348

Calcutta High Court (Original Side) Rules, Chap. XXXVI, r. 77—Sheriff's right to poundage, nature of—Attachment by him under precept issued under Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 46—Claim under decree satisfied on compromise—Sheriff, if entitled to poundage.

The Sheriff has no Common Law right to reward for executing a writ. The Sheriff is not engaged by the litigant to realize the decree. There is no privity between the Sheriff and the litigant. The latter applies to the Court for the enforcement of its own decree and it is the Court that employs the Sheriff as one of its officers to enforce its orders. If the Sheriff is to be remunerated for such services, it is a matter between the Court and the Sheriff with which the litigant has no direct concern. If the Court or the Legislature consider that the Sheriff should receive remuneration, it is for those authorities to make provision by rule or statute for such remuneration, and in doing so they may undoubtedly levy fees on the litigant. Such rule or statute being a taxing rule or statute must be strictly construed so as to guard against any enlargement of its scope to the detriment of the subject who, but for such rule or statute, would be under no liability to pay.

There are two sets of circumstances under which the Sheriff can get poundage (a) where the Sheriff levies a sum in execution, and (b) where the claim in respect of which the Sheriff has taken steps to levy a sum in execution is satisfied, compromised or settled. The alternative portion of the rule is not independent of the first portion; the Sheriff is not entitled to poundage under the second portion of the rule unless he has taken steps under the first portion of the rule with a view to levying a sum in execution. An order issuing a precept is not an order directing execution and the attachment under a precept under s. 46, Civil P. C., is not an attachment in execution proceedings. The attachment under s. 46, Civil P. C., is merely a step taken to facilitate execution; it is not a step taken in the proceedings in execution. So where the Sheriff has attached certain property pursuant to a precept issued under s. 46, and the claim under the decree has been satisfied on compromise entered into after such attachment, the Sheriff is not entitled to poundage. *RAI KISANJI v. Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1923), ss. 139, 141—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court to hear objection as to liability to assessment.

The word "valuation" in s. 139, Calcutta Municipal Act, may mean: (1) the estimated value; (2) the act or process of valuing. There is nothing in this section to limit the meaning of the word "valuation" to the quantum of valuation only. It includes the whole process of valuing as well. Consequently, objections not merely as to quantum of assessment but as to liability to assessment also, can be heard by Small Cause Court Judge. *GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL v. Where a lighter carries goods from the port but it does not carry those goods to any other port, the fact that the goods transported are placed in another ship, which itself carries them to another port, would not bring such lighter within the purview of s. 2 of Act XXVI of 1925. Moreover, even if such lighter was a "ship" to which that Act applies, cl. (g) of r. 2 of Art. Certiorari—Writ of—Order of Board established under Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, declaring distribution of honours at a temple, nature of—Writ of certiorari cannot be issued in such a case.

A question relating to the distribution of theertham or other temple honours cannot be made the subject-matter of a suit as it is not a question which affects a legal right. In settling questions relating to the allocation of honours in religious institutions over which it has superintendence, the Board acts in its administrative capacity.

Hence where the Board established under Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act, determines the order of the distribution of such honours, it cannot be said that it has declared any one's legal right or deprived any one of any legal right which he had and such a decision is merely an order dealing with the internal management of the temple. Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (XIV of 1920), ss. 3, 12—Application under s. 3—Proceedings, nature of—Res judicata—Decision, if operates as res judicata to bar regular suit even in case of person party to proceedings.

The decision of the District Judge under the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act—a decision from which by s. 12 there is no appeal—is a decision in a summary proceeding which is not a suit nor of the same character as a suit; it has not been made final by any provision in the Act; and the doctrine of res judicata does not apply so as to bar a regular suit even in the case of a person who was a party to the proceedings under the Act.

The existence of a public trust is the foundation of the proceedings authorised by s. 3 of the Act: prima facie while the District Judge may have to come to a decision upon this point in order to satisfy himself on the question of his own jurisdiction, he cannot by an erroneous decision thereon give himself jurisdiction. No matter how long or how peaceably an individual may have been in possession and enjoyment of property, it is always possible for persons claiming to be acting for the public to lay claim to the property as having been impressed with a trust of a charitable or religious nature. It would be both drastic and anomalous to provide that a person in possession, if not willing to bring a suit to establish his own title affirmatively, must be content to abide without right of appeal by the decision of the District Judge in a proceeding of this character. *BHAGWAN DIN v. s. 63 as amended by (Act II of 1938),—Offence under s. 63—Only committed when landlord or his agent makes demands from tenants in excess of rent—Manager, Court of Wards, making such demands—Offence is committed.

An offence under s. 63, Chota Nag. Ten. Act is only committed if the landlord or his agent levies or makes certain demands over and above the rent legally due from the tenants. There is no offence if anybody other than the landlord or an agent of the landlord demands commodities from persons who are not his tenants. Where the Manager of the Court of Wards demands certain commodities or animals or birds from the tenants of the estate which he is not entitled to demand, he commits an offence under s. 63.

Section 63 (1) (a) of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act creates an offence but does not deal with the method in which investigation is to be made and the trial to be held; therefore by reason of s. 5 (2) of the Criminal P. C., it must be investigated into and tried according to the provisions of the Code. M. O. ANGHLO v. KANDAN MANJAY Pat. 738

s. 63—Offence to be investigated and tried according to provisions of Criminal Procedure Code—Appointment of manager with previous sanction of Government—Sanction for his prosecution under s. 197, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), if necessary.

There is nothing in s. 63 which deprives the ordinary Criminal Courts of jurisdiction to try all offences under that section. Section 258 does not deprive a Criminal Court of its jurisdiction to try a criminal offence.

Under s. 59-A, Court of Wards Act, a Manager of Court of Wards is a public servant and where according to the rules made by the Court of Wards under s. 70 of that Act such a person getting certain salary cannot be appointed without the previous sanction of the Govt., it follows that he cannot also be dismissed without the sanction of the Govt. There is nothing in s. 211, Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act to suggest that the non-registration will also defeat the claimant in the suit which he is authorised to bring under s. 211, cl. (2), (which corresponds to O XXI, r. 63, Civil P. O.). There is also nothing in the section to show that the transferee's failure to get himself recorded in the landlord's Sherista shall in every case and as a matter of law amount to a representation to the landlord that in any suit which may be brought by him for recovery of rent he is to assume that the transferee is represented by the old tenants.

A sale therefore held in execution of a rent decrees obtained by superior landlord in a suit to which all the tenure-holders were not made parties is not a sale under s. 208 and does not affect the share in the tenure, of persons not parties to such suit even if they have not got themselves recorded in landlord's Sherista. *MOHAMMAD MURTAZA v. s. 9—Suit to establish right to observe Kappu Kattu and Diparathana, whether one of civil nature—Whether can be tried by Civil Court.

It is well-established that the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to decide matters of ritual except in so far as a decision on such matters is a necessary incident to the decision of a civil right. It is also established that a general right of worship either in a particular temple or outside is a civil right which can be claimed in the Courts. Generally speaking the rule is that once the general right to worship is conceded or established, the Courts will not endeavour to lay down the ritual which is to be followed; nor will they prescribe the manner in which the worship is to be conducted. It is also the rule that when there is no obligation to perform an act of worship, there will be no civil right to claim honours or perquisites of nominal value which ordinarily accompany the voluntary act of worship. The position is different if the perquisites are attached to an office or an obligation; but when there is no obligation to render service to the deity, there is no legal right to claim any honorific return for the services rendered.

Civil Procedure Code—contd.

Kappu Kattu is an act of ritual, partly religious and partly appertaining to the caste, which is at the most a mere incident in a series of ritual observances making up the communal festival. There is no obligation upon the members of the community to take part in the festival or to have their young men decorated in a particular way by the priest who presides at the festival. In the same way Diparathana is a matter arising out of no legal obligation and forming the basis of no legal claim. A suit therefore to establish right to observe Kappu Kattu and Diparathana is not of a civil nature and Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain it. NARAYANA MUDALI v. PERIA KALATHI MUDALI

ss. 9, 92—Religious endowment—Mahant having two capacities secular and religious—Both offices interdependent, and inseparably blended—Suit relating to religious office, whether falls under explanation to s. 9—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to remove such mahant from both offices—True test to be applied in considering such removal.

Where the secular and the religious duties of the mahant in the temple are interdependent and inseparably blended, efficient discharge of the one depends on the control of the other. In other words, in all such religious endowments, where tradition and custom play a vital part in intermingling the two functions, their division is unthinkable. Where such an office is connected with an endowment which has valuable properties and is associated with the control of extensive funds, even if the two capacities of the office can be separated, and the mahantship on its spiritual side regarded as purely an office or dignity, the office is of such a nature that a suit relating to it must fall within the purview of the explanation to s. 9 of the Civil P. O., as being a suit of a civil nature lying within the competence of a Civil Court, notwithstanding that the functions of such office are associated with religious rites or ceremonies.

The matter relating to the removal of the mahant of such an institution from both the capacities, secular as well as religious, is one for the consideration of the Civil Court, which must necessarily enjoy a wide discretion to decide what form of punitive or ameliorative order will suit the requirements of the case. But the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to decide such questions can no longer be doubted. The true rule in such matters can be stated to be that if it be found by the Court that the functionary, in the exercise of his duties, has put himself in a position in which the Court thinks that the obligations of his office in connection with the endowment can no longer be faithfully discharged without danger to the endowment, that is a sufficient ground for his removal, if need be, from both his offices. *SATISH OHANDRA GRI v. Proceedings for obtaining probate of a will are not suits. Even assuming however, that it is applicable in principle, it is clear that as between rival applications for probate it is by no stretch of reasoning possible to treat as the date of institution the date on which the caveator may choose to allow the proceedings to become contentious. The only date which can be regarded as the date of institution with a view to deciding which of two rival "suits" is "previously instituted" must be the date on which the petition was filed and not the date on which the caveat was entered. *MRS VIOLET PETERSON v. The question whether the judgment-debtor is an agriculturist has to be decided with reference to the date of the attachment and whether the property is attachable or not has to be decided with reference to the situation on that date. A man might cease to be an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60, Civil P. O. Surely it cannot be argued if a man had so ceased to be an agriculturist that his property could not be attached because at the time of the decree he might have fallen within the definition of agriculturist. Similarly, a man might become an agriculturist and his property might not be liable to attachment at the time when it is attached and it cannot be argued that because at the date of the decree he was not an agriculturist therefore the property was liable to attachment. Where therefore the property is attached when in the possession of and owned by legal representative who is a non-agriculturist, the property therefore is liable to attachment and sale on that date. It is beside the question to discover whether the original debtor was or was not an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60. BALDEV SINGH v. SHERR SINGH Lah. 609

All that s. 64 of the Code provides is that any private transfer by the judgment-debtor of the property attached shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. It will not be accurate to read s. 64 as putting an end to the power of sale, because as between the transferor and the transferee, the alienation will undoubtedly be operative. If the attaching creditor is paid off or for any reason the attachment ceases to subsist, the alienor's title will be unassailable. The only effect of s. 64 is that such transfer shall not prejudice the rights of the attaching creditor. As recognized in s. 40, T. P. Act, the right of the judgment-debtor in the property is on the date of the attachment qualified by the obligation incurred by him under the earlier contract to sell and the attaching creditor cannot claim to ignore that obligation and proceed to bring the property to sale as if it remained the absolute property of the judgment-debtor. Nor can it be said that the sale by the contracting parties executed in pursuance of a pre-existing contract to sell prejudices the attaching creditor, because the sale is merely the fulfilment of the obligation to which the judgment-debtor was already subject. The utmost that the attaching decree-holder will be entitled to, in such circumstances, is the payment of the balance of the purchase money, if anything, remained due on the date of the attachment.

Consequently where son's interest had been attached in execution of a decree against father and the father had been adjudicated insolvent and the Official Receiver under orders of the Insolvency Court sold joint family property in pursuance of a contract of a sale entered into by the father prior to attachment :

Held, that the sale was not contrary to s. 64. The sale was effective to convey not merely the interest of the father but also of the son who continued to remain joint with his father.

Held, further that when the Official Receiver executed the sale deed it was not in the capacity of the representatives of the general body of creditors or even in the exercise of the power possessed by him or by the insolvent to satisfy the general body of creditors that he acted. He was merely carrying out an obligation which prior to the insolvency had been incurred by the insolvents. There was no justification for holding that the order in the claim proceedings instituted by the Official Receiver precluded the person claiming under the contract of sale that he was the owner of the property. *DIRAVYAM PILLAI v. s. 64, O. XXXVIII, r. 7, O. XXI, r. 103—Attachment before judgment—Procedure—Proper procedure not followed—Transfer, if invalidated under s. 64.

Unless all the processes of attachment which are required by law to effect a valid attachment have been served, there is no such attachment of the property as would invalidate its transfer under s. 64, Civil P. O. Under O. XXXVIII, r. 7, the attachment before judgment must be effected in the same manner as the attachment in execution of a decree. Under O. XXI, r. 54, the attachment of immovable property is to be made by an order prohibiting the defendant from transferring or charging the property in any way and all persons from taking any benefit from such transfer or charge. The order has to be proclaimed in the manner described in sub-r. (2) of r. 54. A mere order of attachment is not enough. BAI HAKIMBU v. DAYABAI RUGNATH Bom 655

There is no difference between purchases by A in the name of B where A and B are strangers and where A and B are closely related as in the case of father and son. Section 66, Civil Procedure Code, therefore, applies also to purchases by father in the name of the son.

Section 66 (1), does not deal with a case where A has purchased at Court auction property in his own name though he purchased on behalf of somebody else. The section deals with a case where "any person" has made the purchase "on behalf of the plaintiff." B. L. CHOUDA v. B. K. RAI

A Hindu died disposing of his property by will and a trust deed in favour of charitable institutions. The will provided for a certain amount to be paid to the testator's widow for her maintenance. The widow brought a suit challenging the validity of the deeds and alternatively, if this could not be done, claiming maintenance suitable for her requirements and status to which she was entitled under the Hindu Law:

Held, that the widow was not seeking to enforce the trust. She was claiming what she considered reasonable maintenance not on the basis of the trust but in spite of the trust, relying on principles of Hindu Law to which the trust, though valid in other respects, must conform. She was not asking the Court to administer the trust but administer her husband's estate in accordance with these principles simply for the purpose of giving her proper maintenance. Clause (c) of s. 109, Civil P. O., applies even to interlocutory orders and in appropriate cases such orders can be made the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council. The mere fact that the order superseding the arbitration passed by the Court below was an interlocutory order cannot therefore be a bar to the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. But before the application can be granted, the High Court must be satisfied that the case is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. A case cannot be certified as a fit one for appeal on the mere ground that it raises a substantial question of law. One of the matters to be taken into consideration in this connection must invariably be whether the permission to appeal is or is not calculated to unduly delay the disposal of the substantive dispute between the parties on its merits. If the interlocutory order, the validity of which is sought to be tested by an appeal to His Majesty in Council, is one that is not calculated to prejudicially affect the right of either party to the litigation to have the substantive matters in dispute in the litigation decided by a competent Court ordinarily leave to appeal ought not to be granted. Where the High Court in proceedings for dissolution of marriage has made not merely a decree nisi but also a decree absolute for dissolution of a marriage, a third party cannot move the High Court to set aside that decree absolute by applying the provisions of s. 151, Civil P. O., and the High Court by the application of that section or any other section has no jurisdiction to set aside its own decree.

It may be the case that material facts have not been brought to the notice of the High Court, and that throughout the proceedings in Court right up to and including the decree absolute, the defendant was a minor, and that will necessarily affect the decree if the appointment of a guardian ad litem of the defendant was essential in a suit under the Divorce Act, but that is not by itself any reason for the Court to assume a jurisdiction under s. 151, Civil P. Section 151, Civil P. O., does not confer upon the Courts any powers with which they were not vested before the passing of the Civil P. O. There are certain well-recognized principles which guide the Courts in the exercise of their jurisdiction under s. 151. The Courts must proceed according to the principles of equity, justice and good conscience. Under s. 115 the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere, where the lower Court has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

The parties entered into a contract which took the form of a mortgage-deed and a finance agreement both of which were executed on the same day at Bombay. The deed recited that "no suit or proceeding arising out of and in relation to this indenture shall be instituted in any Court other than the High Court of Judicature at Bombay." On default of the mortgagors to pay an instalment due under the mortgage, the mortgagees filed a suit at Bombay. Subsequently the mortgagors made an application under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act and obtained an injunction restraining the mortgagees from proceeding with their suit in the Bombay High Court:

Held, that judged even by the lowest standards of commercial morality, the conduct of the mortgagors was utterly inexcusable. There was nothing whatever illegal in the contract and such a provision was quite usual and was in the circumstances eminently reasonable. In granting the injunction, the Court had not acted consonantly with the spirit of s. 151, Civil P. O. In restraining the mortgagees from doing something which the mortgagors agreed that they should be permitted to do in a solemn contract, the Court had not acted in accordance with the principles of equity, justice and good conscience. It was not in accordance with these principles to permit a party to repudiate his contractual obligations. In failing to take into consideration the legal rights of the mortgagees the Court acted with material irregularity. GOVIND RAM v. A. U. JOHN All 791

O. I, r. 8—Suit against unregistered body through one of its members only—Procedure under O. I, r. 8, not followed and decree passed against that body—Trial held void and illegal.

Where a suit is brought on behalf of or against an association or an unregistered body, then no one member thereof can alone sue or be sued. The suit must be brought by or against all the members thereof. In order that a decree passed in a suit against an unregistered body should be binding, the procedure laid down by O. Order I, r. 8(1) and (2) lays down the conditions upon which a representative suit can be entertained and proceeded with and if the procedure laid down by that rule is not followed, then the result of the suit has no binding effect on those who are not on the record.

The objection that the procedure under O. I, r. 8, Civil P. O., was not followed, in a suit brought against an association through one of its members only, is not an objection as to non-joinder or misjoinder of parties. The prejudice is obvious in such

The word “effectual” in O. V, r. 20, sub-r. (2) does not mean due service. The order for substituted service is made ex parte, and obviously it should be open to the defendant when he appears to show that the method employed was not calculated to effect the purpose which the Court had in view, namely, informing the defendant of the institution of the suit. The rule that substituted service is to be taken as effectual as personal service only means that the Court hearing the case may proceed with the suit as if the summons had been personally served on the defendant. The basis of the order on which the Court orders substituted service to issue is either that the defendant is either deliberately keeping out of the way to avoid process or that it cannot be served in the ordinary way, perhaps through no fault of his own. In the latter case, the defendant may always show that the proceedings could not have come to his knowledge. In the former case the order of the Court is only relevant to the question whether the defendant was in a position to have knowledge of the proceedings, for obviously if a defendant keeps out of the way to avoid service of process on him either on account of the suit in question or of other suits that have been or may be filed against him, he cannot afterwards be heard to argue that he had no knowledge of the proceedings as he has deliberately put himself in a position where he can have no such knowledge. — O. IX, rr. 7, 13, 6—Code, if in terms provides for application to set aside order declaring defendant ex parte—Courts in mofussil so declaring defendant—If can put restriction on him that he can only cross-examine opposite witnesses and not lead evidence himself—Whether can be debarred for filing written statement at that stage.

Though it is the practice in the mofussil to pass an order declaring a defendant ex parte, the Civil P. O., does not, in terms provide for an application to set aside that order. All that r. 7 of O. IX provides is that where the ex parte hearing of a suit has been adjourned, the defendant may at any time before the disposal of the suit appear, and if he assigns good cause for his previous non-appearance, he may be heard in answer to the suit as if he had appeared on the day fixed for his appearance. It is only when a decree has been passed that an application in terms to set aside that decree is contemplated in r. 13.

In the absence of any express statutory provision as that found in O. VI, r. 2, of the Original Side Rules, Courts in the mofussil have no warrant to impose while declaring a person ex parte, a restriction on him to the effect that he is entitled only to cross-examine the witnesses on the other side and is not entitled to lead any evidence on his own side. Similarly there is no reason to deny him an opportunity to file a written statement at the stage. The mere fact that on the new statement

Husband and wife made cross-petitions under the Guardians and Wards Act, but arrived at an agreement with regard to the maintenance and custody of their minor children. A consent order was passed, whereby the husband was to pay the expenses of the maintenance and schooling of the children and the wife or the school authorities, as the case may be, were to receive the money for the said purpose. Subsequently the wife took out a summons for leave to execute the consent order as if it were a decree for the payment of money under O. XXI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that the order did not fall within the terms of the Guardians and Wards Act, which does not confer on the Court any power to order a parent, or anybody else, to pay the school bills of the minors, but as the parties consented to the Court passing an order, which was within its ordinary jurisdiction, and as they were properly before the Court, the order was a valid order. The consent order, however, could not be regarded as a decree for payment of money to the decree-holder, the wife, for a part, and possibly the whole amount might be paid to third parties, and could not, therefore, be executed as

The omission in an application by one of several decree-holders for execution to mention that there are other decree-holders does not necessarily invalidate the application and when the attention of the Court is drawn to the defect, the Court can allow the application to be amended.

Where, therefore, one of the several decree-holders, as a result of an arrangement arrived at between them applies for the execution of the decree without expressly stating in the application that he is only one of the decree-holders, his application is not liable to be dismissed by reason of the defect and the Court can allow the decree-holder to amend the application in order to bring it into compliance with the requirements of O. Order XXI, r. 62, Civil P. C., is an enabling provision and when the Court is satisfied that the attached property is subject to a mortgage or charge in favour of some person not in possession, it can direct the continuance of the attachment subject to such mortgage or charge. The order contemplated by this Rule clearly indicates that this is a judicial determination, though in a summary way of the question as to whether there is a valid mortgage or charge existing upon the attached property and when the Court passes an order, directing the continuance of the attachment subject to such charge, what is put up to sale is nothing more than the equity of redemption which the judgment-debtor has got in the attached property. The decree-holder or the purchaser cannot, in such cases, dispute the mortgage unless he brings a suit to set aside the summary order under O. XXI, r. 63. The same principle applies when the Court does not pass an order directing the continuance of attachment subject to a mortgage but the mortgagee's application to have such a direction is dismissed or refused. Whether the attachment on the property is directed to continue either subject to or free from the mortgage or charge, the order is one which comes within the purview of O. XXI, r. 62, and if it is not set aside by a regular suit commenced under O. XXI, r. 63, the summary order becomes conclusive and the purchaser or the mortgagee cannot assert any right which that order denies. AMBICA PRASAD SANYAL v. MESSRS. —O. XXI, rr. 62, 66—Third person attaching mortgaged property in execution of money decree—Application by mortgagee that his mortgage should be notified in sale proclamation—Court dismissing application holding that mortgage was discharged—Order, whether under r. 62.

A decree-holder who had obtained a money decree against a mortgagor attached the mortgaged property in execution. The mortgagee applied to the executing Court stating that the attached property was mortgaged to him and praying that at the time of the auction sale notification of his mortgage should be made. Upon this application the mortgagor alone led evidence and the Court dismissed the application concluding that the mortgage had been discharged.

Held, that the order passed by the execution Court amounted merely to refusal to notify the mortgage in the proclamation for sale, and was not an order under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. The phrase "subject to such mortgage" must mean that what is sold is the equity of redemption and that a distinction is made between an express order directing the property to be sold subject to a mortgage and cases where notice of an alleged mortgage is given in the sale proclamation. In the former case a prospective purchaser is told exactly what he is buying; in the latter he takes a chance that the mortgage which is alleged to exist may prove unenforceable either from inherent defects or possibly because it may have been satisfied by the time of the sale, and the price which the property would fetch would vary considerably according to whether the property is definitely stated to be sold subject to an ascertained encumbrance or merely subject to the risk of encumbrances existing. *MISHRAIL v. XXI, r. 98; s. 2—Plaintiff obtaining decree without fraud and collusion and bona fide, believing person sued against to be legal representative of his deceased debtor—Other legal representatives not parties to suit, whether bound by decree—Such representatives, if judgment-debtors within meaning of O. XXI, r. 98—Order passed in their favour refusing to deliver possession to decree-holder, whether appealable as decree.

Where a plaintiff bona fide believing that the person who is sued, is the proper legal representative of his debtor, obtains a decree against him without fraud or collusion, the other proper legal representatives of the deceased debtor would be bound by it even if they were not impleaded in the suit, when the person who has been sued as a legal representative is in possession of the whole estate left by the deceased debtor. The case would be still stronger if the interest of the person who had been sued turns to be identically the same as of those who were not impleaded for want of knowledge on the part of the plaintiff. When plaintiff in such a suit obtains a decree, the legal representatives who are not impleaded in suit must be regarded as judgment-debtors within meaning of O. XXI, r. 98, Civil P. The transfer of property belonging to the judgment-debtor, whether such transfer be voluntary or involuntary, nevertheless operates as a transfer by the judgment-debtor and, the language of r. 102 is sufficiently wide to cover both kinds of alienations by a judgment-debtor. *BHUPIN CHANDRA GORAIN v. If he succeeds in doing so, his dispossession during the pendency of the suit does not matter. fore such person dies before suing the wrong-doer, his heirs, executors or administrators cannot, after his death, maintain an action for the same relief against the wrong-doer. In such a case clearly there is a "discharge of the tort" by the death of the person wronged, and the wrong-doer is released from all liability for his tortious act. It is equally clear that if the injured person had brought a suit, in his life-time, but had died before a decree had been passed in his favour, the suit would have abated and his legal representatives could not have continued the suit after his death, for the "right to sue" in such a case being personal to the deceased did not 'survive'. The position, however, is different when the suit had been decided in the plaintiff's life-time and a decree passed in his favour granting him compensation. On the passing of the decree, there is no longer an actio personalis in existence; it has passed into a judgment and become a matter of record (transit in rem judicatum). The original personal claim has merged in the decree of the Court, and as such, its character has entirely changed. It has to all intents and purposes, become a part of the "property" of the decree-holder and, on his death, it devolves, as a part of his estate, on his heirs, executors or administrators, and they can execute it in the same manner as he would have done, if alive. SALIG RAM v. XLI, Civil Procedure Code, gives to the Appellate Court power to pass any decree and make any order which ought to have been passed or made, etc. This rule contemplates modification of the decree by the Appellate Court at the instance of the appellant. It has no scope where the respondents in effect want to maintain the decree of the lower Court or where the decree under appeal is not modified in appeal. Where the respondent says that he wants to maintain the decree of the lower Court and does not want it to be disturbed, he cannot challenge a finding, the result of which would be to destroy the foundation on which the part decree made by the lower Court in favour of the appellant rests, without preferring any appeal or filing a memorandum of cross-objection. *FAROK AHMED MEAH v. On an application under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, the Subordinate Judge believing that he was in error when he passed the final decree purported to amend his own final decree by altering the same in order to correct what was believed to be a mistake. The District Judge on appeal treated the order of the Subordinate Judge amending the final decree as a decree and allowed the appeal.

Held, that the order of the Subordinate Judge amending the final decree was not an appealable order in itself; but that he should be treated to have amended the preliminary decree which amended decree could be appealed against. KHODROMAL JBRAMDAS v. MBNGHOMAL JBRSDMAL Sind 67

The discretion given to the Court by r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules is a general one, which does, if the justice of the case requires it, enable the Court to extend the time for lodging security to any extent; but in exercising that discretion, the Court must have regard to the fact that under O. Sch. II—Parties agreeing as to their respective shares—Agreement incorporated in preliminary decree and division of properties referred to arbitrators—Final decree wholly based on award—Case, if falls under Sch. II.

There is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure to prevent the parties from referring the matter in difference between them to arbitration at any stage of the suit. Where in a partition suit the parties have agreed among themselves as to their respective shares and this agreement is incorporated in the preliminary decree but the division of the properties is referred to the arbitrators and the division of the properties which is wholly a subject of the final decree, is wholly based upon the award of the arbitrators, the case falls under Sch. II. RADHEY LAL v. KANHAI LAL Pat. 52

Para. 1—Partition suit—Parties not agreeing as to mode of division of properties and referring matter to arbitration—Such case, if covered by Para. 1.

The expression "the matter in difference between the parties" which has been used in Para. 1, Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code, is quite general and fully covers a case where in a partition suit the parties not having agreed among themselves as to how the property was to be divided, referred the matter to the arbitrators. RADHEY LAL v. KANHAI LAL Pat. 5.

Para. 16—Decree in accordance with award—Award in excess of powers conferred on arbitrators—Appeal, if lies.

There is ample provision in Paras. 14 and 15, Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code, to enable the Court to which the award is submitted, to refuse to give effect to the award if in its opinion it is either void or invalid or illegal. If, however, the award is accepted, it means that in the opinion of the Court it is neither void nor invalid and the Legislature does not appear to have intended that the opinion of the Court should be challenged on appeal. Paragraph 16 merely gives effect to the principle of finality of awards and the intention of the Legislature evidently is that an award should be subjected to the scrutiny of one Court only, namely, the Court through which reference is made to arbitrator and not that Court and an Appellate Court. No appeal, therefore, lies from the decree when it is in accordance with the award, even the award itself is in excess of the powers conferred upon the arbitrators. RADHEY LAL v. KANHAI LAL Pat. 5

In India, the presumption in law is that if a person buys property in the name of another but with his own money, the transaction is benami and that the property in what is bought is in the person whose money was used for the transaction. So where a father with his own money purchases shares of a company for his minor sons and signs the application form on behalf of his sons, the father must be considered as owner of the shares and must be placed on the list of contributors. Contract—Champerous transaction—Agreement to finance suit in consideration of having share in property, if recovered—When opposed to public policy—Points to be considered—Agreement held valid.

Champerous transactions are in their essence speculative and the fairness or otherwise of a particular bargain is almost always open to some debate. In applying the principle that "a fair agreement to supply funds to carry on a suit in consideration of having a share in the property, if recovered, ought not to be regarded as being, per se, opposed to public policy" it is essential to have regard not merely to the value of the property claimed but to the commercial value of the claim. This has to be estimated by the parties in advance of the result; and where they have weighed the probabilities in a manner which has not operated unfairly, it is more reasonable to regard this as confirming their shrewd estimate of the chances, than to condemn the agreement outright as unfair, by reason only of the possibility that a great gain to the claimant would have had to be shared with the financier. Though it is clearly not conclusive, the proportion to be retained by the claimant is an important matter to be considered when judging of the fairness of a bargain made at a time when the result of the litigation is problematical. The uncertainties of litigation are proverbial; and if the financier must needs risk losing his money, he may well be allowed some chance of exceptional advantage:

Held, that the agreement was valid and binding.

—Concluded contract—Burden of proof—Only certain terms settled, while others left open—Whether concluded contract—Option for renewal of contract on terms to be mutually agreed upon—Whether implies that terms of prior contract should be incorporated in new one.

In an action on an alleged contract, the burden of proof is of course, upon the plaintiffs to show that a firm contract has been entered into between the parties and that something more than mere negotiations had taken place. The negotiations and correspondence must be looked at as a whole to see whether the parties to them have concluded a binding contract or not. There is no concluded contract, where only certain terms of the contract were settled and the other terms were left open.

Moreover, the fact that a party to the contract has given the other party to it, an option for renewal of the contract on terms which would be mutually agreed upon, does not imply that the terms of the prior contract, or any of them should be incorporated in the new one. The party does not bind itself in any way to renew the contract upon the old terms. AKOONH JADWET & Co. v. A. V. & SON

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 19, 20—Suit for possession by Municipality decreed with costs—Judgment-debtor's offer not to file appeal and also to deliver possession, if Municipality gave up costs, accepted—Judgment-debtor found not to have right of appeal—Agreement held either void under s. 20 or voidable under s. 19.

Municipal Committee instituted a suit for possession of certain property which was alleged to have been encroached upon by one R. The suit was decreed with costs. The judgment-debtor R thereafter applied to the Municipal Committee to the effect that if the Committee gave up the costs, he would not file any appeal from the decree and also deliver possession of the property. The Committee accepted this offer. The Committee on re-examination of the matter found that as a matter of fact R had no right to appeal at the time when he made the offer:

Held, that even if the judgment-debtor made the offer honestly believing that he had a right of appeal, it would amount to saying that both the parties were under a mistake of fact essential to the agreement when they were alleged to have entered into the agreement in question; because the Committee would never have agreed to give up their costs if they knew that R's right of appeal had already become time-barred. If, on the other hand, R had made a dishonest misrepresentation, the agreement would be voidable at the instance of the Committee on that account. s. 12 (ii)—Decree signed and sealed but Court ordering plaintiff to pay deficit court-fee—Plaintiff getting benefit under decree—Revision from such order—High Court can take action under s. 12 (ii), before passing final orders.

Where the plaintiff is ordered to pay the deficit court-fee after the judgment is signed and sealed, the Judge would be acting without jurisdiction, in that after giving judgment, his power to order the deficit court-fee to be paid is gone. But although the plaintiff may have a genuine grievance that he had not the opportunity of being heard and that the Court was functus officio, if he gets benefits from the decree, it is but reasonable that he should pay court-fee upon the benefits so received. Consequently the High Court, in revision from such an order, can before passing final orders, take action under s. 12 (ii), Court Fees Act. RAMOHAN KIMATRAI v. UDHMAL DWARKADAS Sind 364

Sch. I, Art. 1—"Value of subject-matter in dispute," meaning of—Appeal on merits also challenging order of costs independently—Value of subject-matter of appeal is total amount of value of subject-matter in suit and amount of costs challenged.

The words "value of the subject-matter in dispute" in Art. 1, Sch. I, Court Fees Act refer, where the Court is concerned with a suit, to the value of the subject-matter of the suit, and where it is concerned with an appeal then these words refer to the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal. The subject-matter of the suit and the subject-matter of the appeal may not be the same. Where the appellant appeals against the decree in a suit on merits and also challenges the order of costs independently, then the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal is the total amount consisting of the value of the subject-matter in the suit and the amount of costs challenged. BHAWANI SHANKAR v. Art 17-B, s. 7 (v) as amended by Madras Act V of 1922—Mortgagee of portion of house obtaining decree, purchasing that portion and obtaining symbolical possession thereof—Another mortgagee of whole house obtaining decree purchasing whole house and refusing first mortgagee to enter into possession of his portion—Suit by first mortgagee for partition and possession held fel. under s. 7 (v) and not under Art. 17-B.

Court Fees Act—conold.

A mortgagee obtained a mortgage decree in respect of a portion of a house and at the subsequent sale in execution became the purchaser thereof and obtained symbolical possession of that portion. Another decree-holder subsequently obtained a mortgage decree in respect of the whole house, and in execution thereof purchased the house and was in physical possession of the whole house and refused to allow the first mortgagee to enter into physical possession of his portion. The first mortgagee thereupon brought a suit for partition of the property and possession of his half share. In his plaint he averred that the second mortgagee was in wrongful possession and enjoyment of the whole house:

Held, that the suit was in truth and in fact a suit for possession against a person in wrongful possession of the property. The plaintiff was in possession of no portion of the property. Criminal Appeal Ordinance of Trinidad and Tobago (1931)—Court of Criminal Appeal established under—Whether branch of Supreme Court—Person appointed as acting Judge under s. 7 (1) of Judicature Ordinance of Trinidad and Tobago (1880) as amended in 1936, if can act as member of Court of Criminal Appeal—Court of Criminal Appeal composed of Chief Justice and two Acting Judges held not properly constituted—Interpretation Ordinance (XIX of 1933), ss. 17, 20—Applicability—Constitution of Court.

The Court of Criminal Appeal established under Criminal Appeal Ordinance, 1931, of Trinidad and Tobago, is not established as a branch of the existing Supreme Court; but as a separate Court of Record, the Judges of which are stated to be the Chief Justice of Trinidad and Tobago and the Puisne Judges of Trinidad and Tobago. The Criminal Appeal Ordinance contains no power to appoint a person to act as a Judge of the Court of Criminal Appeal.

A person appointed under s. 7 (3) of the Judicature Ordinance of Trinidad and Tobago (1880), is not a Puisne Judge of Trinidad and Tobago, nor is he under that provision invested with any powers beyond such as are necessary to enable him to act effectively as a Judge of the Supreme Court. Such person cannot, therefore sit as a member of Court of Criminal Appeal.

Sections 17 and 20 of the Interpretation Ordinance, 1933, deal with the case of one individual being appointed to take the place of another individual, and to act as a substitute for him.

An acting Judge is not a Puisne Judge of the Colony, for the number of Puisne Judges is fixed and cannot be exceeded. Moreover, they are appointed in accordance with instructions received through a Secretary of State, which is not the case with acting Judges.

Where, therefore, an appeal from conviction of the accused is heard by the Court of Criminal Appeal composed of the Chief Justice of the Colony and — ss. 107, 112—Notice under s. 107, if must relate to breach of peace or wrongful act in contemplation at time when information is given to Magistrate.

Action taken under s. 112, Criminal P. O., constitutes a judicial act and therefore the Magistrate should not act arbitrarily. There must be information of a nature which convinces him that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. It is impossible to formulate a hard and fast rule with regard to the nature of the information on which a Magistrate should act. What is reasonably sufficient to satisfy a Magistrate must depend on the particular situation. While that there must be something more than the past misconduct of the person proceeded against to justify a notice being served upon him, the Code does not require the information to show the particular act which is in contemplation at the time. The Magistrate must be satisfied that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace. What will satisfy him must depend on the particular facts of the case.

The High Court has undoubtedly power to quash proceedings where the notice issued does not comply with the requirements of s. 112, but before doing so, it must be satisfied that there has been a failure to comply. It must be remembered that the issue of the notice is merely a preliminary step and no order can be passed under s. 107 unless the inquiry which follows the issue of the notice shows that the laying of the information was justified. The High Court can always interfere when the inquiry has not been held in accordance with the law or a wrong conclusion has been arrived at. IN re MUTHUSWAMI CHETTIAR

s. 144—Order under s. 144 against public generally.—Scope of—Requirements of—Order held not in accordance with law.

The scope of an order passed under s. 144, Criminal P. O., against the public generally is narrower than that passed against an individual and served personally on him. Although the word "public" has not been used with the expression "particular place" in s. 144 (3) still the law intends not only that the particular place should be specified but also that it should be a place which is frequented or visited by the public.

An order passed under s. 144, Criminal P. O., was addressed to the general public and was to the effect that nobody shall sacrifice a cow within a radius of a mile from certain villages:

Held, that the order proclaimed was not in accordance with law. BABU v. EMPEROR Oudh 745

s. 144 (1), (2)—Order under first two clauses of s. 144 cannot be issued to general public.

The first two clauses of s. 144, Criminal P. O., do not invest the Magistrate with any power to issue an order to the general public. They are confined to the case of an individual person or persons to whom a notice may be issued directing them to refrain from a certain act or to take certain order with certain property in their possession or management. SAT NARAIN v. EMPEROR All. 172

s. 144 (3)—Order under cl. (3), when can be issued to general public.

It is clear from the terms of sub-cl. (3) of s. 144, that no order under s. 144 can be issued to the public generally except when, "frequenter or visiting a particular place" and any order which ignores this limitation must be held to be bad in law. SAT NARAIN v. EMPEROR All. 172

s. 145—Fresh proceedings under s. 145, when can be started.

Obiter.—Where in previous proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., a party is declared to be entitled to possession, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to start fresh proceedings under s. 145 if the party to such proceedings was not a party to the previous one. AMBIKA THAKUR v. EMPEROR Pat. 529

s. 145—One party claiming exclusive possession and other joint possession with them—Proceedings under s. 145, if appropriate.

Proceeding under s. 145, Criminal P. O., can be started in a case in which one party claims exclusive possession while another party claims to be in joint possession along with them as the question in such a case is no less a question of disputed actual possession than if each party claimed exclusive possession of the entire area. ZAFAR ALBAN v. JUGESHWAR BUX ROY Pat. 346

s. 145—Party forbidden to disturb possession of successful party—If can plead that he is still in possession in spite of order under s. 145 or that he has been able to regain possession by force.

The whole object of s. 145, Criminal P. O., is to stop a breach of the peace by deciding which party is to remain on the land and which party is to seek his remedy in the Civil Court. Breaches of the peace will continue, and the object of the Legislature will be frustrated if the party who has, on the finding that he is not in possession, been forbidden to disturb the possession of the successful party until eviction in due course of law, is allowed to interfere with the possession of the successful party and to plead once more that whatever the order might have been, he is still in possession or has been able to regain possession by force, and thus either compel the successful party to go to the Civil Court or to coerce a Magistrate to proceed again under s. 145, Criminal P. O. This will be a definite encouragement to disobedience of orders under the section. AMBIKA THAKUR v. EMPEROR Pat. 529

s. 145—Possession—State delivery of possession by Civil Court, whether conclusive proof of present possession.

The law is that the Criminal Court ought to hold that if on a given date the plaintiff has been put into possession by the Civil Court then on that date the plaintiff got possession as against the defendant. But where a considerable period elapses between the date of delivery of possession and the date on which possession of the land is disputed, a state delivery of possession cannot be conclusive as to present possession. ZAFAR ALBAN v. JUGESHWAR BUX ROY Pat. 346

s. 145—Possession of successful party, whether can be put to an end by unsuccessful party by violence or surreptitious invasion.

Though an order under s. 145, Criminal P. O., confers no title, the fact of possession remains and the person in possession can only be evicted by a person who can prove a better title to possession himself. The possession of the party which succeeds in proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., cannot be put an end to by the unsuccessful party by mere violence or surreptitious invasion. Therefore, even if the unsuccessful party in proceedings under s. 145 is able on some occasions either surreptitiously or forcibly to cultivate the lands in possession of the successful party, these would be no more than isolated acts of trespass—and offences punishable under s. 188, I. P. O., but not acts amounting to the dispossession of the other side and constituting the juridical possession of the offenders unless the other side refrain from asserting their possession for a sufficiently long period, and give up the protection of the order under s. 145 in their favour. AMBIKA THAKUR v. EMPEROR Pat. 529

ss. 145, 146—Decree-holder obtaining symbolical possession in execution of decree upon delivery warrant—Judgment-debtor attempting forcible entry within two months—Application under s. 145 by decree-holder—Magistrate by order under s. 145 (1) referring back parties to Civil Court—Propriety of.

Where in execution of a decree the Court orders delivery of possession of judgment-debtor's property to the decree-holder and the Officer of Court executing the delivery warrant gives effect to the order and since then the decree-holder is in possession both in fact and in law of the property in question but the judgment-debtor within two months of the execution of such warrant attempts forcible entry upon the land whereupon the decree-holder files a petition in Criminal Court under s. 145, Criminal P. O., the Magistrate cannot go behind the decision of the Civil Court in the matter and cannot ignore the decree even though the Court passing the decree had no jurisdiction over the land. It is immaterial that the delivery of possession is symbolical only. In the enquiry under s. 145, there is only one conclusion possible for the Magistrate to arrive at with reference to the land, that is, that it was in the possession of the applicant on the date of the order passed under sub-s. (1) of s. 145. Even assuming that the applicant (decree-holder) had been forcibly dispossessed at any time after the execution of the delivery order, the first proviso to sub-s. (4) will operate in favour of the applicant. Consequently, when in such circumstances the Magistrate passes an order under s. 146 (1) referring the parties back to Civil Court for the determination of their rights, the order is highly improper and opposed to all principles of justice. MAUNG KAN v. —Investigating officer, if justified in not sending them for trial on ground of insufficient evidence.

Where definite allegations are made by aggrieved persons which they are prepared to support by positive evidence, apparently free from taint, it is generally not the function of the Police to play the rôle of Judges and to pronounce their verdict on the truth or falsehood of those allegations. In such cases, they are bound to send up the accused for trial and not to discuss the probabilities or the improbabilities of the case and come to a final decision of their own. But where there is a tendency to implicate innocent persons along with the guilty whenever any occasion arises in that respect, not only the Courts but the investigating officers must proceed cautiously when they are faced with that situation. A Police Officer is in the same position as a Magistrate holding inquiry in cases triable by a Court of Session, and such Magistrate as power to discharge an accused person if the evidence against him is palpably false or legally insufficient. Where the investigating officer not being satisfied with the evidence against some of the accused feels that they are falsely implicated he is justified in not sending them for trial. JAIMAL INGR v. —s. 195 (1) (a)—Complaint under s. 195 (1) (a), absence of—Effect—There was held no complaint.
The fact that no complaints required by the mandatory provisions of s. 195 (1) (a), Criminal P. O., were made makes the trials nugatory.

On a report of a Sub-Inspector of Police that certain persons had sacrificed a cow against the order passed by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate under s. 144, Criminal P. O., prohibiting such sacrifice within certain areas, with a suggestion that cases under s. 188, I. P. O., should be started against those persons, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate sent the reports to the District Magistrate that those persons be prosecuted. The District Magistrate passed an order sanctioning the prosecution and making the case over to a particular Magistrate and returned the records to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who then sent the cases to the Magistrate named:

Held, that the reports sent to District Magistrate are not complaints under s. 195 (1) (a). The mere fact that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate while giving evidence before the trying Magistrate several months later, called them complaints did not make them complaints. BABU v. EMPEROR Oudh 745

The expression "direct" in s. 289 (3), Criminal P. It therefore follows that the direction of the Judge that there is no evidence that the accused committed an offence is binding on the jury and must be followed by them, and the jury cannot return a verdict of guilty on such a direction. The question of absence of evidence is a question of law and not a mere question of fact. EMPEROR v. QUDRAT All. 271

—ss. 297, 537—Omission of Judge to explain to jury all essential elements of offence charged against accused, when vitiates trial.

Under s. 297, Criminal P. O., it is the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury all the essential elements of the offences charged against the accused and to give directions on the law so as to make the law clear in relation to the facts of the case and the evidence adduced. Even the mere reading of the sections to the jury does not amount to an explanation of the law. Nor can the Judge rely on the fact that Advocates on both sides had explained the law to the jury. The Judge must lay down the law by which the jury is to be guided. This provision is imperative. It is the clear duty of the Judge to explain what in law are the essential requisites of an offence and what must be proved to constitute that offence. An important non-direction to the jury or an omission to direct them on an important point, amounts to misdirection; but s. 297 must be read along with the provisions of s. 537 of the Code. It is necessary, however, that the misdirection should be such as to occasion failure of justice, such failure of justice as would vitiate the trial or proceedings. There is no ground for broadly assuming that if even a mandatory provision of the Code is infringed, the result in all cases must be to vitiate the trial irrespective of whether it has or has not occasioned failure of justice. *EMPEROR v. —s. 345 (5-A)—No impropriety in order of lower Courts—Case heard and determined by competent Court—High Court, if can record compromise—Use of discretion—Aggrieved person must be before High Court.

It is clear from the language of s. 439, Criminal P. O., read with s. 345 (5-A) of the Code that the High Court can, in certain circumstances allow a compromise to be recorded in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction in the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to its knowledge. The language of s. 439 is very wide and it does not limit the jurisdiction of the High Court to interfere in revision merely in cases in which the High Court has called for the record of a case on the ground of some alleged illegality or impropriety in the order made by an inferior Criminal Court. The High Court is competent to record the compromise having regard to the provisions of s. 345 (5-A) even although there is no impropriety in the order of either of the lower Courts in suitable circumstances; the parties can be allowed in such cases to compromise their disputes even after the cases in which they were concerned had been heard and determined by the Courts competent to try them. But the exceptional powers conferred by s. 345 (5-A) should not be used where the proceedings before the lower Court disclose no irregularity or impropriety, except where the record indicates that the parties made some attempt to compromise their differences while the matter was still before the trial Court and before the Court passed final orders.

Ordinarily the party who seeks to invoke the jurisdiction of the High Court under sub-s. (5-A) of s. 345, must be the person aggrieved by the offence which has been committed and not an accused person or a person who has been convicted in respect of that offence. In any event it would not be competent for the High Court to allow a compromise to be recorded under sub-s. (5-A) of s. 345, unless the aggrieved persons were actually before the High Court and had expressly recorded their consent to such a compromise being recorded. *BAHURALI SARDAR v. Where a recommendation for enhancement of sentence has been made to the High Court after the decision of the appeal, the accused when called upon to show cause against the enhancement of the sentence cannot be allowed to show cause against his conviction, but may only show cause against enhancement of the sentence. The order of the High Court in appeal must be regarded as final and the accused person cannot be heard to show cause against his conviction. It does not make any difference that the accused's appeal from jail was dismissed summarily. Such appeals are dismissed summarily after consideration of the grounds of appeal, in addition to the judgment and, if necessary, the evidence. THE KING v. NGA BA SAING Rang. 142

In order to discharge this duty, it is necessary for them to see that their judgments fulfil the requirements laid down by the law. Revision can only be granted, if there is some error of law, some irregularity, or some abuse of power on the part of the lower Courts. It is inadvisable for the High Court to interfere in revision when two Courts have concurred in holding that a prosecution is in the interests of public policy. In case of a prosecution under s. 193, I. P. O., such a revision is not even in the interests of the accused person as it deprives him of the only means of clearing his character, which would otherwise remain affected by the fact of the complaint having been made and endorsed by the Court of appeal. SHARI LAL SUD v. Sub-s. (6) of s. 439, Criminal Procedure Code, can only refer to sub-s. (5) of the section, and means that, although a party who has not appealed cannot be allowed to make an application in revision, yet, proceedings are taken against him in revision and notice to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced is issued to him, he shall, in showing cause, be entitled also to show cause against his conviction. Sub-s. (6) is intended to operate as an exception to what is otherwise laid down in the section itself. THE KING v. NGA BA SAING Rang. 142

Under s. 562, Criminal P. O., when an accused is released on probation of good conduct, no sentence is passed by the Court. Therefore, when, under s. 562 (3) the High Court sets aside an order and passes a sentence in lieu thereof, it cannot be said that it enhances a sentence within the meaning of s. 439 (6), Criminal P. The Special Judge is primarily Civil Judge and if he takes any action under s. 476, Criminal P. The powers of the High Court under s. 491, Criminal P. All that the High Court is concerned with while exercising its power under s. 491, is to see that the authority under which a person is being detained is on the face of it legal and valid. If there are any formal defects in the warrant under which the applicant is arrested, the High Court can certainly take notice of them and can upon that basis hold that the warrant is on the face of it invalid. It would necessarily follow in that event that the detention of the applicant was unlawful, but this is the limit beyond which the High Court cannot go in the exercise of its power under s. 491. ISRAR HUSSAIN v. In the absence of any special form prescribed by law with reference to the preventive sections of

The only condition contemplated by a bail bond is a condition for attendance in Court and a bail bond in which any other condition of the nature of condition as to undertaking for good behaviour such a bond, is included, cannot be regarded as a bond under the Code. The forfeiture of such a bond is therefore illegal. GIANI MAHER SINGH v. EMPEROR Cal. 249

Where although the conditions imposed on the accused before releasing him on bail do not form part of the bail bond executed by the surety, yet if the surety has signed the order-sheet of the Magistrate against the part which contains the undertaking on which he accepted the bail bonds, the order-sheet with the surety's signatures itself becomes a part of the contract between the parties.

Where the Magistrate has failed to follow the procedure under s. 514, Criminal P. O., in holding the surety to his bond without calling upon him to show cause why the penalty should not be paid, although such an omission is not justifiable, yet if the facts show that such an omission has not occasioned any failure of justice it is sufficient to prevent interference in revision. RAM BILAS SHARMA v. EMPEROR Pat. 598

In cases where a bond has been executed for appearance merely, it is often unnecessary for the Magistrate to record any evidence at all. The Magistrate knows by his own observation that the accused failed to appear in his Court. The burden of proving the negative, that is to say that the accused absented themselves without reasonable cause for their non-appearance, is not upon the prosecution and it is for the surety to give an explanation why the accused person was unable to attend Court.

Obiter.—In case of bond under s. 106, Criminal P. O., it is necessary for the Magistrate to record evidence to prove the commission of a fresh breach of the peace and the forfeiture of the bond. Such evidence need not, according to the terms of s. 514, be taken in the presence of the respondent, but when the respondent appears and shows cause he must be given an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses upon whose evidence the Magistrate has directed him to show cause why the bond should not be forfeited. The section does not require that before a final order is made the witnesses on whose evidence the forfeiture is held to be established, if they have been previously examined in the absence of the accused, must again be examined in his presence.

Where the Magistrate directs forfeiture of bond executed for the appearance of accused and directs the surety to pay penalty without giving the accused and the surety an opportunity of showing cause by adducing evidence, as to why the accused failed to appear, the order is bad and must be set aside. KUMARAPAN v. Where a Magistrate after having refused to take proceedings under s. 144, Criminal P. O., thinking that he was not competent to investigate the question as to who was in possession of the property seized, directs the Police to retain it in their custody; and, if it was liable to decay, to sell it, and deposit the money in safe custody pending orders from a proper Court, he has not judicially exercised the discretion which s. 523 confers on him and the High Court can, therefore, interfere with his order. In such a case he must exercise the discretion conferred by s. 523 and if he decides that one or other of the parties was in possession at the time the Police seized the property, the proper order to be passed will be to restore that party to possession. If the Magistrate is unable to decide who is in possession, it will be his duty to issue a proclamation under sub-s. Where the fact disclosed in the complaint under s. 420 constitutes an offence under s. 477 and it is found that the Magistrate trying the case and acquitting the accused under the former section had no jurisdiction to try the same under the latter section, the proceedings before him are void and the accused should be re-tried under the latter section but he should not be allowed to adduce fresh evidence so as to fill in gaps under s. 561-A, Criminal P. When one accused is charged with having murdered a certain person at a certain place, and another accused is charged with having murdered the same person at the same time and place, and both these accused are being prosecuted because there is evidence against both, but the evidence is of such a character that both of them cannot be convicted, and if one set of evidence is believed, one of the accused will have to be convicted, whereas if the other set of evidence is believed, the other accused will have to be convicted; it cannot be said that those persons are charged with the same offence committed in the course of the same transaction within the meaning of s. 239, Criminal P. It is the duty of a Public Prosecutor to conduct the case for the Crown fairly; his object should be, not to obtain an unrighteous conviction, but, as representing the Crown, to see that justice is vindicated; and in exercising his discretion as to the witnesses whom he should or should not call, he should bear that in mind. It is his bounden duty to place before the Court for the adjudication of the Court, all the evidence against the accused persons and should not withhold certain evidence by not calling the principal witness on the ground that he did not believe the witness's evidence. Custom—Essential requirements of, for legal recognition—Mere exclusion of names of daughters from khewat, if establishes their exclusion from share in father's inheritance by recognised custom

It is of the essence of special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be ancient and invariable, and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends.

family or tribe of agriculturists moves from one canal colony to another canal colony, no question would really arise as to the binding force of their customary law. They bring with them, when they migrate, their customary laws including the customary law of succession prevailing in the district from which they migrated.

The Jat agriculturists of Gurdaspur District of the Punjab who migrated to Sind nearly forty years ago under a colonization scheme to cultivate land watered by Jamrao Canal have not adopted the system of law practised by the people of Sind but have continued to follow the Punjab customary law. Custom (Punjab) Alienation—Landlord's right to challenge alienation of house belonging to non-proprietor—Such alienations taking place for long period—Effect on onus.

Broadly stated, it may be taken as a rule that where a large number of unchallenged alienations by non-proprietors have been taking place for a very long period, the onus should be placed on the landlords to show that they have a right to control those alienations. This they may be able to show by proving a grant and then the case would be governed by the terms of that grant. To hold otherwise would be to hold that a rule of custom had been established and before a finding of fact on such a point could be upset, a certificate as regards custom must first be obtained from the District Judge.

It is true that once the onus is placed on the landlords, it is an onus which is almost impossible to discharge but that is no ground for shifting the onus when a large number of instances of sales and mortgages extending over a century have been established and in not one case has there been a successful challenge. The conclusion is almost inevitable that the landlords had no right to challenge an alienation of a house belonging to a non-proprietor unless the landlord could show that the house was built on land granted by the proprietary body out of the shamilat deh. *RANJIT SINGH v. Decree—Nullity—Same manager representing both plaintiff and defendant whose estates were under protection of Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1870)—Defendant not prejudiced—Decree passed is good one and not nullity—Court should look to substance and not form of action.

The fact that the same manager represents both the plaintiff and the defendant whose estates were under protection of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act in a suit brought in 1919 undoubtedly makes the proceedings highly anomalous but this does not make the decree passed in that suit a nullity when the defendant is not in any way prejudiced, as, the anomaly is due to the provisions of the Act as it stood at the time of the suit. In such a case the question which the Court has to ask is whether there was a genuine and bona fide contest in the suit. —Construction—Document to be construed as whole.

The document, according to the well-known principles of construction must be construed as a whole and it is not legitimate to pick out one or two paragraphs and rely upon them only and to discard the rest of the document. The intention of the parties must be gathered from the whole of the document. FAROK AHMED MRAH v. LALIT MOHAN CHOUDHURY Cal. 94

—Construction—It is a matter of law—Duty of Judge—Description partly correct and partly incorrect—Correct description sufficient to identify subject-matter—Land described by boundaries and area—Which prevails.

The construction of a document is a matter of law, and it is the duty of the Judge to construe the terms of the grant in accordance with law, and on his independent construction of its terms, to come to his own conclusion as to whether the lands in suit were included within the grant or not. He is in no way bound by the opinion of the Financial Commissioner, which is based upon considerations which are irrelevant in a Court of law.

When a description in a document is partly correct and partly incorrect and the former part is sufficient to identify the subject-matter intended while the latter does not apply to any subject, the erroneous part will be rejected in accordance with the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet cum de corpore constat, and extrinsic evidence to show that the intention of the parties was not in accordance with the part of the description which is correct is inadmissible. So, where there is a description of land in a document setting forth the boundaries and then specifying the quantity as so many acres, etc., the description in regard to the acreage is considered to be mere false description if there is an error in the quantity, and the land within the boundaries passes by the document, whether it be less or more than the quantity specified. BAKSH ALI v. Section 72, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, applies to a suit falling under both cls. (w) and (y) of s. 3 of the Act. A suit may include several reliefs, some of which may be in time and the others time-barred. The question whether a suit is in time or not, cannot be decided unless each relief claimed in the suit is separately considered. In a mortgage suit where the relief claimed by the mortgagee is the recovery of the mortgage money by the sale of the mortgaged property and a personal decree is claimed in case the sale proceeds are found insufficient, the claim to recover the mortgage debt by the sale of the mortgaged property is governed by the provisions of the *Lim. Electricity Act (IX of 1910), ss. 44 (b) 26 (5)—Electricity Rules, r. 31—s. 44 (b) requirements of—Removal of meter from its old position after breaking of seals, to new position by extending service line—Offences under s. 44 (b) and r. 31, held, committed—R. 31, if conflicts with s. 26 (5).

Section 44 (b) Electricity Act does not require that the "works" laid or connected up with any other "works" belonging to the licensee must also be "works" belonging to the licensee. "Works" as defined in s. 2 (n) of the Act includes electric supply lines. The supply line, therefore, up to the point at which it enters the meter comes within the meaning of "works" as defined in s. 2 (n).

Held, that the accused in laying the additional line from the former position of the meter up to its new position was laying "works" within the meaning of s. 44 (b), and he laid that line for the purpose of connecting it with other works belonging to the licensee, namely the old supply line which terminated at the original position of the meter. His act, therefore, clearly amounted to an offence within the meaning of s. 44 (b).

Held, further that as the accused broke open the seals which had been placed by the company upon the meter, his act clearly amounted to an offence under r. 31 (1) of the Electricity Rules.

Rule 31 of the Electricity Rules does not deal with cases which s. 26 (5) contemplates but deals with the tampering with the seals placed on a meter which is already working. There is, therefore, no conflict between r. 31 and 26, sub-s. (5). M. A. BHAGVATI v. EMPEROR Bom. 506

It is only when there is replacement of lamps, fans, fuses, switches and other component parts of the installation that the alteration in capacity and character have to be examined. This exception, however, will not apply to electrical installation work including additions, alterations, repairs and adjustments of existing installations. Where the wires originally fixed on the surface are subsequently buried in the walls, there is certainly an alteration in the system and not a case of replacement and a breach of r. 48 (1) is committed. —Limitation—Implied adjudication of question of limitation—There was held no implied adjudication.

The answer to the question whether in a particular case there has been implied adjudication of the question of limitation depends upon the circumstances of each case. If the execution Court had passed any effective order for further execution to the detriment of the judgment-debtor, it might safely be inferred that there had been an implied adjudication of the question of limitation. Mere awarding costs of execution to the decree-holder and noting the balance due under the decree are mere formal matters and of a ministerial character and do not involve any adjudication of the question whether the application is capable of being proceeded with or not.

An application for execution was beyond limitation. Although the notice was served on the judgment-debtor he did not appear and the decree-holder having expressed a desire that his application should be consigned to record room, the Court passed an order to that effect awarding costs to the decree-holder and noting the balance due under the decree:

Held, that implied adjudication of question of limitation in favour of decree-holder could not be inferred from the order. RAMJI LAL v. MANDAI

Execution sale—Attachment and sale of judgment-debtor's movable property by decree-holder—True owner recovering such property from auction-purchaser—Auction-purchaser, if can recover from decree-holder money paid by him on ground of total failure of consideration.

Per Full Bench.—If a decree-holder attaches and sells in execution of a decree against a judgment-debtor (the sale proclamation saying that the right title and interest only of the judgment-debtor is being sold) movable property, and such property is subsequently recovered by its true owner from the auction-purchaser, the auction-purchaser is entitled to recover from the decree-holder the money which he has paid on the ground that there has been a total failure of consideration.

Per Baguley, J.—There is a difference between a sale in which the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property sold and a sale in which he has no interest in the property sold. If the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property sold, there is no guarantee by any party or by the Court as to the extent of that interest, and, if that interest is sold, the sale becomes absolute and no more can be said or done about it in the absence of misrepresentation, fraud, etc. On the other hand, when the judgment-debtor has no attachable interest at all, nothing has been sold, and if nothing is sold, there is no sale. There is, therefore, nothing to become absolute and nothing to be set aside. There is simply a payment of money in return for nothing and the money having thus passed is returnable.

Per Sharpe, J.—The whole basis of a sale of movable property, be it a sale by the Court or not, is that something is sold. That basis is unchanged even in cases where the sale is by the Court in execution of a decree, the sale proclamation saying that only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor is being sold. In those cases in which it transpires that nothing whatever is in fact sold, there is, if the purchaser has paid the purchase money, a total failure of consideration. MAUNG AYA MAUNG v. A. Factories Act (XXV of 1934), s. 71—Procedure contemplated by s. 71 (1)—Admission of offence by alleged actual offender—Whether proof that manager or occupier used due diligence or that the offence was committed without his connivance.

The complaint is made in the first instance by the Inspector of Factories against the manager or occupier under s. 60, Factories Act. The manager or occupier is then entitled under s. 71 to complain against the actual offender and if he does so, the actual offender is given notice and brought before the Court and the trial proceeds as against both persons complained against; for, the section contemplates both sets of complainants and accused being before the Court at the same time. The carriage of proceedings is with the original complainant on whom the onus lies of proving that the offence has been committed. Both parties complained against are concerned with the finding on this issue and both are entitled to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses at this stage, and to lead evidence to disprove the charge, but being accused persons they would not be entitled to give evidence themselves. If the prosecution fails to prove the offence, both the accused must be acquitted. If the offence is proved, the Court should record an order to that effect and the manager or occupier is guilty under s. 60 of the Act. Section 71, however, affords the manager or occupier an opportunity of escaping liability provided he can give satisfactory proof of the facts required by s. 71 (1) (a) and (b). The onus of proof, however, is now shifted to the manager or occupier and he is entitled to call evidence to give evidence himself. The actual offender who is, the ultimate accused, would be entitled to call evidence, but not to give evidence himself. The difference in procedure being due to the fact that the actual offender occupies the role only of an accused, whereas the manager or occupier at this stage, besides being an accused, has to discharge the onus of positive proof required by s. 71 (1) (a) and (b), and in all probability alone is capable of proving certain facts of which proof is thereby required. The Crown, which has initiated the proceedings, and has throughout retained the carriage of the proceedings, is entitled at this stage to cross-examine the occupier or manager if he gives evidence, and any witnesses called by him in support of his charge, and to call rebutting evidence.

The Magistrate cannot convict the alleged actual offender or discharge the manager or occupier until the proof envisaged by s. 71 (1) (a) and (b) is before him. It is true that s. 342 (3), Criminal P. O., permits the Court to take into consideration the answers given by the accused to an admission of the offence by one of the accused is no proof that the other accused had used due diligence to prevent the offence, or that the offence was committed without his connivance. SUPRENTENDENT & REMEMBRANCE OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL L. As O. XLV, r. 7, Civil P. IX, r. 1 of the Federal Court Rules. Rule 9 of Order in Council of February 9, 1920, only empowers the Court to extend time when justice of the case requires it, and such power should be exercised with great caution and where there are cogent reasons for doing so. It is only where the justice of the case demands that the Court should extend time that

The fact that the appellant who was a karta of the joint family had contracted small-pox which made him unable to deposit the money within period allowed by law is a cogent reason for extending the time. The High Court is not closed during the vacation, and the money can be deposited and, if tendered, will be accepted during vacation. Time, however, may be extended if failure to deposit printing costs is due to the honest impression on the part of the appellant that if the money is deposited on the opening day of the Court, it would be accepted as being within time as this is not an ordinary case of ignorance of the law, but to a large extent mistake committed due to the failure of the Court in making the position clear.

Per Agarwala, J.—Neither para 9 nor any of the other paragraphs of the Order-in-Council of 1920, applies to appeals to the Federal Court and, consequently, the High Court has no power to extend the time prescribed by O XLV of the Civil P. O., in the case of appeals to the Federal Court.

The phrase "date of the decree" in O. XLV, r. 7 (1), Civil P. O., means the date which the decree bears or the date upon which judgment was pronounced. The starting point of time therefore in O. XLV, r. 7, is the date which the decree bears and not the date when the decree was actually signed.

Obiter.—The meaning of O. XLV, r. 7 (1), Civil P. O., as it now stands, is plain. An extension of time may be granted for deposit of printing charges after the expiry of 90 days upon cause being shown, but such extension of time cannot exceed 60 days, and if this further period of 60 days has elapsed, the Court has no power under the rule as it stands to grant further time. The words are, mandatory and limit the discretion of the Court. If the period of 90 days from the date of the decree has expired, the Court can at most grant a further extension of 60 days. Once that period has elapsed, the Court has no power as the rule stands, to grant any further time. Rule 9 of the Privy Council Rules, however, allows the Court either to cancel the certificate or make such other order as the justice of the case demands. The words used in r. 9 are sufficiently wide to give the Court power to extend time for making deposits of printing costs in proper cases in appeals to His Majesty in Council beyond the limits fixed by O. XLV, r. 7, Civil P. O. LACHMESHWAR PRASAD SHUKUL v. GIRDHARI LAL CHAUDHURY Pat. 353 F B

General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 10—"Office," if includes office of Court—Deposit made on re-opening of Court after vacation, if within time.

An act directed or allowed to be done or taken in an office is used in s. 10, General Clauses Act in contradistinction to an act directed or allowed to be done or taken in a Court, and "office" does not here include the office of a Court, for, the office of the Court is merely the hand with which the Court performs some of its functions. Hence, the fact that the office of a Court remains open while the Court itself is closed for judicial business will not deprive a litigant of the extended time for doing an act to which s. 10, General Clauses Act, applies. The High Court is closed for ordinary business during the annual vacation. Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 7—Appointment of guardian for minor's property—Enquiry regarding minor's property should be made—Enquiry, nature of.

In an application for the guardianship of property of a minor, it must be shown that the minor has some separate property as without that there is no foundation for the application. It is true that an enquiry for the purposes of the Guardians and Wards Act is not meant to be a lengthy and elaborate enquiry, but there must be some basis for finding that there is some property at all. If the deceased father of the minor was governed by the Muhammadan Law, then the widow is entitled to her share and the balance would be the property of the minors of which a guardian could be appointed. If on the other hand this person was governed by the Customary Law, then his widow takes a widow's estate and during her lifetime the minors have no right in this property except for maintenance. No guardian of the minors can, in such circumstances, take possession of such property in the lifetime of the widow. HASSAN BI v. NEK ALAM

Here the period of limitation would run from the date of the sale, and there is only one cause of action which would arise in favour of the other members who had not consented to the sale. Successive causes of action cannot arise as new members are born year after year. Mortgage by adoptive mother for amount greater than required for legal necessity

—Mortgagee can recover only portion required for legal necessity—Difference between sale and mortgage for legal necessity, explained.

The effect of a sale of property for a larger sum than immediate necessity requires, is not necessarily the same as the effect of a mortgage for a larger sum than is required, for, it is not always possible for the father of a family to sell just that share of the property which will bring in the precise sum which is wanted to clear the debts which are binding. What the Court has to consider in the case of a sale is whether the sale should be set aside or not. The sale is either valid or invalid. A mortgage may, however, be valid for less than the whole amount advanced, or it may be valid for the whole amount against one defendant, and for part of the amount only against another defendant. In enforcing a mortgage the Court takes an account of what is due.

Where it is found that a mortgage executed by an adoptive mother was for a greater amount than was required for the legal necessity, the mortgagee is only entitled to that portion of the advance which was advanced for legal necessity. *PURUSHOTAM DAMODAR RAICHURKAR v. The sale by the natural guardian of a Hindu minor of the minor's property when there is no legal necessity for such sale is not void but voidable and is valid until set aside. The minor on attaining majority has the right to have the sale set aside and he must do so within the period fixed by Art. 44, Limitation Act. Until the sale is set aside, the minor's interest in the property amounts merely to a right to sue and therefore a transferee from him does not get anything. MON MOHAN BHATTACHARJEE v. BIDHU BHUSAN DUTTA Cal 6 —Widow—Mortgage by widow to redeem previous mortgage by husband—Subsequent mortgage by her to pay off time-barred claim under previous mortgage, whether binding on reversioners.

The payment of a husband's debt, though barred, is a pious duty on the part of the widow. The Hindu Law does not recognise any bar of limitation. According to the Hindu Law leaving a debt unpaid is a sin, the consequences of which follow the debtor into the next world. Therefore, an alienation by a widow of property of her husband in order to pay off the debt of her husband even though barred by statute, is an alienation, which is binding upon the reversioners.

A Hindu widow executed a mortgage in 1913 in order to redeem a mortgage executed by her deceased husband in 1893. The widow again in 1916 executed mortgage to redeem the mortgage of 1913 and in 1934 she executed a mortgage to pay off a claim under the mortgage of 1916 which had become barred by time:

Held, that the effect of the transaction of 1913 was that the debt of 1893 was paid off and ceased to exist. The debt of 1913 was a debt due from the widow or the estate inherited by her and hypothecated in lieu of that debt. The debt made payable by the deed of 1916, was, therefore, the debt not of the deceased husband but of the widow and, therefore, the consideration of the mortgage of 1934 was the time-barred debt of her own and not that of her husband. The mortgage of 1934 was not therefore binding on the reversioners. C. ANDRIKA PRASAD v. BHAGWAN DAS Oudh 105

—Alienation—Widow—Necessity—Consent of next reversioner though not conclusive proof, is prima facie evidence of legal necessity.

When a document of transfer supported by consideration is executed by a Hindu widow and the document is consented to by the next reversioner that consent in itself affords prima facie evidence of legal necessity and it is not necessary for the transferee to adduce evidence of legal necessity beyond the evidence of the consent. The next reversioner is the person most interested in disputing the transaction and his consent will naturally afford presumptive proof of legal necessity, and if such proof is not rebutted by contrary proof, the consent, although it will not be conclusive proof of legal necessity, will be of great evidentiary value. *KAULSHAR SHUKUL v. —Son's liability—Father selling son's interest in joint family property, whether merely exercising power of sale possessed by son himself—Father's power, if can be limited by s. 64, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908).

The recognition of the father's power to sell the son's interest for the discharge of his own debts is destructive of the principle of independent coparcenary rights in the sons. To the extent required to satisfy the father's proper debts, the father and his creditors are entitled to ignore the son's coparcenary rights in the family property. The father when he sells the family property for the discharge of his debts is not merely exercising the power of sale possessed by the son himself. The father's power cannot be limited by reason of the statutory disability imposed by s. 64, Civil P. C., upon the son as a result of the attachment of the son's interest. *DRAVYAM PILLAI v. —Guardian—Paternal grandmother of minor—Endorsement of payment made by her, if can bind minor under s. 21, Limitation Act (IX of 1908)—Desirability in matter of appointment of guardian, when relevant.

The ancient texts of Hindu Law do not provide for the management of a minor's property beyond stating that the guardianship shall vest with the king. The position of the king is now taken by the Court. Custom has, however, recognized that the father of a Hindu minor, and on his death the minor's mother, is entitled to the guardianship of the minor's estate. But the custom has not extended the rule beyond the mother. Neither by Hindu Law nor custom is the grandmother recognized as the lawful guardian of the minor. No member of the family other than the father or the mother has been recognized as having the right of guardianship. All other things being equal, the nearest relative of the minor should have the position of guardian but if the father and the mother have died, no relative can become the lawful guardian without an order of the Court. It follows that neither the paternal grandmother nor any other relations beyond the mother can be regarded as possessing an inherent right to act as lawful guardians for the purposes of s. 21, Lim. Act, even if such person happens to be the minor's nearest living relation. Hence the endorsement of payment made by the minor's paternal grandmother cannot bind the minor.

Per Mockett, J.—Desirability can only be relevant in an application to remove the father or mother or in an application to appoint some one else.

—Joint family—Suit by minor co-parceners for accounts of ancestral property in hands of third person—Manager not joined as co-plaintiff but joined as defendant—Suit, if maintainable.

Where the father, the manager of the joint Hindu family is not joined as co-plaintiff, the minor co-parceners cannot bring a suit for accounts of the joint ancestral property in the hands of a third party, even if the father is joined as defendant and supports their claim. The minor plaintiffs cannot give that third person a receipt or quitance on settlement of his accounts, even should that person be willing to account. That can be done only by the manager, who therefore, alone is entitled to call for accounts and give a quitance or receipt on settlement. If therefore, the minor plaintiffs cannot give a good quitance or receipt on settlement of accounts, obviously they have no right to sue. Since it is the manager or karta who is alone competent to represent the family, to act for it and to bind it. The device of joining the manager as a defendant does not avoid the difficulty. KHEMCHAND RAMDAS WADHWA v. MATHRADAS GIRDHARIDAS Sind 845

—Maintenance—Daughter—Maintenance denied to daughter during lifetime of her father—If can file suit directly against manager of joint family—Proper course for her to be followed, stated.

A daughter, during the lifetime of her father is not entitled to bring a suit directly against the manager of the joint family property, ignoring the fact that the primary responsibility for her maintenance is upon the father and his properties, both joint and separate. The proper course for a daughter to adopt, if during the lifetime of her father, she has been denied maintenance, is not to bring a suit for maintenance against the manager of the joint family, but to bring a suit against her father claiming maintenance out of his properties, joint and separate. After she has got her decree, she may, if necessary, enforce it by the sale of her father's share in the joint family properties. This would presumably lead to a proper partition in which the rights of each branch of the —Maintenance—Minor co-parcener—Maintenance, denied to him—In suit by him for maintenance he must make also alternative claim for partition—Minor co-parcener, whether can claim maintenance without making alternative claim for partition.

A co-parcener cannot claim maintenance if he is entitled to claim partition. But although it cannot be said that in no circumstances can a Court give a decree for maintenance against the family properties in favour of the minor co-parcener, yet in the vast majority of cases, where the circumstances would justify a decree for maintenance, they would also justify a decree for partition and so it should be open to the Court to pass that decree which the Court thinks best in the interests of the minor whose rights have been denied. From this, it follows that a minor co-parcener who has been denied maintenance and wishes to claim maintenance should bring his suit in the alternative claiming partition or maintenance as the Court thinks fit, unless his guardian decides to adopt the usual form of a suit claiming partition in the property.

[Quære.—It is very much doubtful whether a minor co-parcener has a right to claim maintenance without at least putting it within the power of the Court to give the ordinary relief of partition should the Court think fit] CHERUTTY v. NAGAMPARAMBIL RAVU Mad. 26

Hindu Law—contd.

— Widow — Adverse possession — Property acquired by widow by adverse possession, in her own right, becomes her absolute property.

Property acquired by a Hindu widow or other qualified heir by adverse possession of which she takes and retains possession in her own right for 12 years or more becomes her absolute property and that she can dispose of it by means of transfer, inter vivos or will, but if the property is not claimed by her adversely it will become an accretion to her husband's estate. But the question has got to be determined in every case whether the widow entered into possession adversely to the reversioners, or as a widow representing her husband's estate. KAULAS AR SHUKUL v. RAM KISHORE LAL All. 644

— Dedication by, powers of—Dedication of husband's property for spiritual benefit only of widow—Validity.

Under Hindu Law although a widow has power to dedicate a portion of her husband's estate to religious and charitable object, the widow's act must be reasonable, having regard to the value of the estate, and its object must be such as according to the notions prevalent in Hindu society conduce to the spiritual benefit of her husband. Where a widow dedicates a part of her husband's estate for the maintenance of a deity not installed by her deceased husband and it is found that the dedication is prima facie for the spiritual benefit of the widow herself and not for that of her husband, the dedication is invalid. KUMAR RAGHAVA SUBENDRA SAHI v. BABUL LACHMI KORE Pat. 179

— Maintenance—Members agreeing to pay maintenance at certain rate—Rate, when subject to variation according to family fortunes—Method of obtaining variation—Deed of such agreement, construction of—Decree awarding maintenance—Practice of Courts—Manager's power to enter in agreement regarding granting of maintenance—Past and future maintenance—Decree—Variation—Practice.

Under the Hindu Law the widow's right to maintenance is dependent upon the family fortunes and so is liable to fluctuation both up and down in sympathy with them; and the parties concerned can contract themselves out of this and undertake to pay and receive a fixed and unvariable sum irrespective of the state of the family's finance at any given time. But they must say so in express terms. When they agree to a certain rate, and say nothing more, they are, merely reaching agreement on one question, namely the fair rate applicable to a given set of circumstances. They do not usually mean to abrogate the rest of the law which states that that rate shall be liable to variation if and when circumstances alter, and indeed, to cease altogether under certain conditions. An implied term has to be read into the contract that the agreement is subject to the usual incidents of Hindu Law and is to be read along with it and interpreted in that light. Variation is permissible only when the circumstances have altered to such an extent as to justify a variation of the figures agreed upon and they are altered before the accrual of the cause of action for maintenance. The only method of obtaining relief would be by showing that the agreement has ceased to subsist, or that the circumstances which, according to its implied meaning, will justify a variation, have come into play.

The right to alter or rescind rate of maintenance fixed for payment to a widow does not rest in the hands of either one side or the other but depends upon external circumstances which apply equally to both.

A deed whereby it is agreed to pay maintenance to a Hindu widow must be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances and with reference to the practice and usage in these matters: to do otherwise would result in an unjust conclusion.

In decrees where maintenance is awarded, Courts should insert words which would enable them on application to set aside or modify their orders as circumstances might require, and in such cases, the remedy would be the more appropriate one by application under the leave reserved.

The manager of a joint Hindu family has the right to settle maintenance claims. When he does so, he acts on behalf of the family as a whole; so it is bound by his action.

Ordinarily the questions regarding the payment of past and future maintenance would be separate and independent and so in the absence of an express statement to the contrary, it must be assumed that they were treated separately.

Obiter.—If a decree directs the doing of a certain thing, then that thing must be done unless and until the decree is altered or provides on the face of it for the limits of its own existence. It is not like a contract which can be varied by common consent and in which the law, recognizing the unwillingness of the average person to put into writing clauses which are too obvious to his mind to require mention, takes into consideration the surrounding circumstances. No such laxness can ordinarily be imputed to Judges. Their decrees can only be varied or altered by the Court itself and only in a particular way. TRIMBAK v. BHAGU BAI Nag. 580 — WIDOW—Possession by, of property not legally entitled to possess—Criterion as to whether she prescribed to absolute or limited estate—Widow held prescribed to absolute estate.

Merely possession by a Hindu widow of property to which she is not legally entitled is not sufficient to create an absolute title in her. The criterion is her own intention and conduct and the question whether she prescribed to an absolute estate or to a limited estate must be decided on the facts and circumstances of each case.

A Hindu widow had obtained mutation of certain property in the teeth of opposition by the other heirs and there was absolutely nothing to show that she claimed to be in possession as a limited estate holder:

Held, that the widow prescribed to an absolute estate and not to a limited estate. PATIPAL SINGH v. KAMPAL SINGH Ouah. 137 (b)

— Remarriage—Effect on rights of widow to hold property.

Obiter.—Re-marriage according to the accepted view of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, O. P., results in the forfeiture of the widow's right to hold possession of the property that devolves on her from her husband or from his lineal heir. PANNALAL v. SUMRANLAL Nag. 108

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 2 (4), 10—
Karachi Chamber of Commerce realising measurement fees from its members—Such realisation whether taxable as profits.

Where the members of the Karachi Chamber of Commerce provide for themselves certain facilities in trade and pay for these facilities such as a measurer of merchandise, they combine as a Chamber and provide these facilities for themselves as members of that Chamber and when they pay more than is actually necessary for the provision of these services, then the surplus, whether it is handed back or not, is not a profit on trade within the meaning of ss. 2 (4) and 10, Income Tax Act. It is not a profit but it is savings and not taxable income, though interest in these savings would be income liable to taxation. The fact that the public measurer serves also the public or that the members are incorporated as a Chamber under s. 24, Companies Act, does not destroy the mutuality between the Association and its members.

Before there can be mutuality between an Association and its members, the services must be supplied by the Association to its members as such, services for which the members themselves pay from which payments any surplus is saving and not profits or gains. The nature of the services is not the test. The test is not the purpose of the Association but its nature. If the Association is of the nature of a club and its services are solely for the benefit of its members or, if not solely for the benefit of its members, the services for its members and the costs thereof are clearly separable from its services to non-members and the costs thereof, then there is no profit but merely a surplus or saving: if no, then there is a taxable profit or gain. There is in principle no difference between a club which provides a marker for tennis on payment by the individual club members and a Chamber of Commerce which supplies a measurer of merchandise on payment by its members. Both are employees of the Association provided at the cost of and for the benefit of its members, and if there is a surplus or saving on the year's working, it is not taxable profit or gain. It may be handed back; it may be kept for some future contingency; the test is whether it is the members' money. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, SIND & BALUCHISTAN v. s. 4 (2)—Assessee receiving interest on Government Bonds in England—This sum expended in England in purchasing machinery for use of assessee's business and sent to India—Whether income received or brought into British India.

What the Income Tax Act charges with tax is income and nothing but income, whether that income accrues or arises or is received in British India or is deemed so to arise or accrue or be received by reason of being brought into British India. But if income arising or accruing without British India is spent or otherwise so dealt with that it ceases to be income instead of being brought into British India, it is not chargeable under the Act merely because the thing upon which it has been expended or into which it has been turned, is subsequently brought there.

Assessee were the owners of certain sterling bonds of the Govt. of India, the interest on which was payable in England. The assessee received such interest in England and this sum was expended by their agent in the purchase in England on behalf of the assessee of certain mill stores and machinery which were then sent to the assessee in British India and there used by them for the pur-

Held, that the things brought into India could, in no sense, be described as income brought into British India within meaning of s. 4 (2) and as only income could be taxed under the Act, the sum so received and expended could not be taxed. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, SIND & BALUCHISTAN v. What the law requires the Income-tax Officer to see is not a system of account to be kept by the assessee in respect of a particular loan which may have been omitted in that account, but the system of accounting which the assessee regularly employs for his own purposes with respect to all the loans which he discloses. If any loans are deliberately left out from the account kept regularly by the assessee, then it is open to the Income-tax Department to disbelieve the accounts and to proceed in any way they choose by acting under the proviso but on exercising a judicial discretion. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BIHAR & ORISSA v. ss. 42, 43—Nandlal Bhandari & Sons, Indore, managing agents of a company Nandlal Bhandari Mills, Ltd., Indore, opening on behalf of latter, branch at Cawnpore under their own control under name Nandlal Bhandari Mills, Ltd., Cawnpore—Managing agents supplying goods to branch and receiving commission on sales effected there—Commission paid annually—Nandlal Bhandari Mills, Ltd., Cawnpore, held, agents of Nandlal Bhandari and Sons, Indore, within meaning of ss. 42 and 43.

It is manifest from the language of s. 43, Income Tax Act, that a person may be fictionally deemed to be an agent for the purposes of the Act who might not be an agent as that term is ordinarily understood at law. In order to show that a non-resident has a business connection with a resident of British India, it must be established that the two persons have some sort of association in a business, that is to say in a profit-making occupation or activity in British India, and when this is established, it will have to be determined whether the other conditions of ss. 42 and 43 are satisfied.

Nandlal Bhandari & Sons of Indore were the managing agents of Nandlal Bhandari Mills, Ltd., Indore, a company engaged in manufacture of textiles on whose behalf they had opened a branch at Cawnpore under their own control known as Nandlal Bhandari Mills, Ltd., Cawnpore. Nandlal Bhandari & Sons supplied goods to the branch at Cawnpore, which were sold in British India, and they received a commission on the sales so effected. By way of remuneration it was agreed that Nandlal Bhandari & Sons should have a fixed allowance and should also be entitled to commission on the net profits of the company and to commission on the gross sale proceeds. The commission was to be paid annually when the accounts of the company were made up:

Held, that Nandlal Bhandari Mills, Ltd., Cawnpore, were and could be treated as the agents of the non-resident firm, i. e., Nandlal Bhandari & Sons, Indore, under ss. 42 and 43 of the Income Tax Act. Even if it be held that Nandlal Bhandari & Sons are only entitled to receive their commission when the annual accounts of the company were made up, the fact remained that their right to this commission accrued upon the sales effected at Cawnpore. This being the position, the commission was in the nature of profits or gains accruing or arising to the non-resident through or from a business connection in British India within the meaning of s. 42, and must therefore be deemed to be income accruing or arising in British India; and since there was a "business connection" between the branch at Cawnpore, representing in British India the company at Indore, and the non-resident firm of Nandlal Bhandari & Sons, the resident branch at Cawnpore must be deemed to be the agents of the non-resident firm within the meaning of s. 43, and the profits accruing in British India to the non-resident firm were chargeable in the name of their fictional agents in British India. NANDLAL BHANDARI MILLS, LTD., CAWNPORE v. —ss. 66 (2)—Fee of Rs. 100, is part of reference by assessee and part of cost of reference by Commissioner and falls within terms of "costs" as used in sub-s. (6). Assessee unsuccessful in reference—His contentions shown to be wrong—Taxed costs—Setting off against fees of Rs. 100 paid under sub-s. (2).

"Fee" in sub-s. (2) of s. 66, Income Tax Act, does not mean a deposit or security. It is the price paid by the assessee for the reference and it is not unreasonable to assume that the word is used in its ordinary meaning, that is to say, it is a fee for payment for work done in connection with the reference by the Commissioner. It is part of the costs of reference by him and likewise the cost or part of the costs of the reference by the Income-tax Commissioner. Therefore, as such, it falls within the term 'costs' as used in sub-s. 6 and it is in the discretion of the Court to pass such orders in relation to it as may, in its judicial discretion, seem proper. When the assessee is successful, when it is clear that he is right in his contention, there is no reason why he should not have paid back to him as part of the costs incurred, this Rs. 100 plus any taxed costs incurred by the proceedings in Court. But on the other hand, there is no reason, if he should fail and his contentions be shown to be wrong, why he should not lose this Rs. 100 and pay as well the taxed costs incurred by proceedings in Court on the general principle that costs should follow the event. The taxed costs will not be set-off against the fee of Rs. 100 paid under sub-s. (2) of s. 66, Income Tax Act, which the Commissioner will retain as a fee. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, SIND & ADEN v. CENTRAL POPULAR ASSURANCE CO., LTD. Sind 683

Assessee applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case on a question arising under s. 25 (3), Income Tax Act. The Commissioner refused to state a case on the ground that the order was not prejudicial within the meaning of s. 66 (2) read with s. 33. The assessee then applied to the High Court under s. 66 (3). The High Court made a reference to a Full Bench of five Judges and the answer given to the reference was that an order refusing to interfere with a prejudicial order was itself prejudicial. On receipt of the answer given by the Full Bench to the question referred, the Bench dealing with the petition directed the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case on the point of law involved:

Held, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to grant a certificate under s. 66-A (2), in the matter of permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council:

Held, also that the direction which was given to the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case was an interlocutory order in a matter in which the Court was required to act in an advisory capacity and consequently the High Court had no authority to grant a certificate permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council under cl. 40 of the Letters Patent (Mad.) COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS v. Held, that the right rule was that the costs should follow the event. Insurance—Assured assigning policy to wife—Effect—Creditor of assured, if can attach moneys in hands of wife—Construction of assignment endorsement—Reverter clause—Held amount not assets of deceased assured—Deed—Construction.

The policy in question was an endowment policy obtained by the deceased. The assured assigned this policy in favour of his wife by an endorsement on the policy itself. This assignment was duly communicated to the Insurance Company and there registered. The endorsement, which appeared in a usual form suggested by the Company provided that the benefit of all moneys to become payable under the policy was assigned to wife and declared that her receipt shall be a sufficient discharge to the Company for the same, provided, however, that in the event of her predeceasing the assured or in the event of his surviving, the date on which the said policy would mature, the benefit of the policy and the right to receive moneys thereunder should revert to the assured as if the assignment had not been made. Before the policy had matured and during the lifetime of the assignee the assured died. In execution of a decree obtained against the deceased assured, the decree-holder sought to attach the policy amount as assets of the assured in the hands of the assignee:

Held, that on its true construction the endorsement in this case operated as a present transfer in favour of the assignee, though provision had also been made for a reverter to the assignor, in certain contingencies. It did not amount to a power-of-attorney or a transfer in future. The provision for reverter only emphasised the immediate operative-ness of the transfer. If the events that happened had brought the reverter clause into operation, the creditors of the assured would no doubt have been entitled to treat the policy amount as having become part of the estate of the assured. But in the events that happened the assignee was entitled to recover the policy amount and there was no scope for the operation of the reverter clause. Ejectment—Held on facts that the plaintiffs were entitled to declaration of title and confirmation of possession through tenants who could not be ejected.

Government claimed certain lands which were reformed in 1916 and since then were in possession of the Govt.'s tenants. In 1923 Govt. acknowledged the title of the plaintiffs to these lands on condition that the tenants, would remain on land till 1930. A document for consideration in plaintiffs' favour was executed but it was not stamped as conveyance. It conveyed to the plaintiffs whatever rights the Govt. had in the land. In 1925 the plaintiffs instituted a suit against the tenants for establishing their title to and for recovery of possession of the re-formed lands:

Held, that the acknowledgment by Govt. could not deprive tenants of their rights acquired under limitation, the tenants could not, therefore, be turned out. —Misconduct—Appropriation of client's money by Advocate—Name struck off roll—Reinstatement, when advisable.

Where an Advocate misappropriates a considerable sum of his clients, the act of professional misconduct committed by him is a very grave one and it is not possible to allow him to continue practising in an honourable profession. But that does not mean that the Court is precluded from reinstating him when adequate punishment has been imposed and he has shown that he has rehabilitated himself in such a manner that he is fitted to be admitted into his profession again. *In the matter of K. —Professional misconduct—Investments of his savings by Advocate, when constitute engagement in money-lending business.

What does or does not constitute money-lending business must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case and is not capable of an exact definition. The question is a mixed question of fact and law and the answer to the question must depend on the facts found in each particular case an element of continuity and habit is essential to constitute the exercise of a profession or business.

Investments of his savings by an Advocate do not necessarily amount to engagement in money-lending business, the more so when such investments are few and far between and are mostly made to relations and friends. Nevertheless, if investments by way of loan are made as a matter of regular business and for gain, there can be no escape from the conclusion that such investments constitute engagement in money-lending business. In the matter of BHAIRO DUTT BHANDARI, AN ADVOCATE —Re-admission—Name struck off from roll for misappropriation—When can be re-admitted.

Before the Court can re-admit an Advocate who has been struck off the rolls for misappropriation, the Court must be fully satisfied that he has fully regained his character and is fitted for re-admission into the ranks of an honourable profession. Mere opinion is not sufficient. The Court requires solid facts and cogent reasons, not merely the opinions expressed by gentlemen who had given him certificates. Re-admission does not depend on the fact that he has been suspended or struck off the rolls for several years. He can only be re-admitted if he can show that he has become worthy to act as an Advocate. In deciding such matters the Court has a duty to the public and where an Advocate has been guilty of misappropriation, it must be shown that there is no likelihood of such an offence being committed again.

[After considering all the facts, the Court thought it fit not to re-admit the Advocate.] In re S. AN ADVOCATE —Act bars remedy only by way of suit—Right exists and can be enforced by other remedy.

The rule of limitation is a rule of procedure, a branch of the adjective law, and does not either create or extinguish rights, except in the case of acquisition of title to immovable property by prescription under s. 28, Lim. Act. It is only the remedy by way of a suit that is barred, but the right itself continues to exist; and if there is some other remedy by which that right can be enforced, the Lim. Act cannot come in the way. Thus, where the recovery of a debt is barred by lapse of time, the right to the debt is not extinguished, and if the debtor, without being aware of the bar of time pays up, he cannot sue the creditor to refund the money to him on the ground that his claim for recovery of the debt had become time-barred. *SURAT BOROUGH MUNICIPALITY v. But where the plaintiff had a recourse to the Advisory Board which is not a Court, instead of to the Railway Commissioners, he cannot be said to have prosecuted his claim in good faith and hence in such a case s. 14 cannot extend time.

—ss. 21, 20—Lawful guardian, who is—Acknowledgment by de facto guardian, whether prevents debt being time-barred.

Per Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—A lawful guardian can be no other than a person whom the law invests with the right and duty of protecting the property of the minor. Such a person is generally described as a de jure guardian in contrast to a de facto guardian. The law does make a real distinction between a de jure guardian and a de facto guardian. A de facto guardian may be a relation or even a mere intermeddling stranger who in fact assumes the management of a minor's property though in law he or she has no authority to do so. It is consequently impossible to regard him as a lawful guardian, notwithstanding the fact that by reason of the decision of Courts, the acts of a de facto guardian bind the estate of the minor, if done under the pressure of necessity or for the clear benefit of his estate.

An acknowledgment of a debt made by a de facto guardian of a minor does not prevent the debt from being time-barred. KARINAGISETTI CHENNAPPA v. KARINAGISETTI ONKARAPPA Mad. 749 F B

The ordinary rule is that the cause of action for recovery of principal and of interest accruing due on it is a single cause of action and where the claim is a single claim for principal and interest, two periods of limitation are not applicable. Under the Lim. Act, limitation begins to run when a cause of action accrues. It is obvious that it would be the right of the agent to claim that no cause of action on the basis of revocation could arise against him until the termination of his authority as an agent. In so far as the cause of action is the revocation of the agency, he could not be sued until he had received notice of such revocation. Where the allegations in the plaint, that the sale was a sham transaction or a mere paper transaction, are correct, a suit for possession of the property based on those allegations must be governed by Art. 144 and not by Art. 91. Therefore the decision of the question of limitation would depend on the decision of the question whether the sale in dispute was a sham transaction. It is not safe to lay down any rigid formula for the purpose of determining the date of payment, as the question of payment being a question of fact, must be determined with reference to the circumstances of each case.

One M had a joint decree for rent against the plaintiff and defendants, and in execution of that decree he obtained from the executing Court an order for the attachment of a sum which had been deposited into X Court by a judgment-debtor of the plaintiff, to the credit of the latter. Subsequently, on August 20, 1932, the executing Court by its order directed to transfer the money to the credit of the decree-holder, and to send the payment order to X Court. On September 3, 1932, the payment order was made over by X Court to the decree-holder. The plaintiff brought a suit for contribution against defendants within three years from September 3, but beyond limitation from August 20:

—Terms "discontinued" and "dispossessed"—Held, on facts that no question of discontinuance of possession arose and that the suit was governed by Art. 144.

Article 142, Lim. Act, applies if the plaintiff has sued on the footing that while in possession he was dispossessed by the defendant, or if the fact be established that while in possession he was dispossessed by the defendant. The word "discontinued" in Art. 142 connotes three elements, two physical and one mental. There must be (1) actual withdrawal, (2) with an intention to abandon, and (3) that another should step in, begin to occupy after the withdrawal. Dispossession signifies expulsion, an adverse act which has the effect of putting out. It presupposes physical contact, a collision, either with another person or with his physical acts. The physical presence on the property of the person affected is not necessary but the adverse act of the other party must have the quality of destruction. Acts of possession of the former must be effaced by the latter.

Where a person is not in physical possession either himself or through some one else holding under him at any time after the re-formation of the land and he does not exercise any acts of possession but through a fiction of law he is in possession of the lands till the lands are actually fit for possession and he is not turned out either physically or by adverse acts of another, no question of discontinuance arises and a suit by such person for establishing his title to and for recovery of possession of such re-formed land would come within Art. 141, and not Art. 142 and the opposite party must prove adverse possession for 12 years or over before suit.

The right obtained by adverse possession for more than 12 years would be co-extensive with the assertion of the claimant. ABDUL LATIF v. HABIBULLA

Where the Court passes the final decree and the preliminary decree is confirmed on appeal, the limitation for an application for execution of the final decree runs not from the date of the final decree but from the date of decree of the Appellate Court in appeal from the preliminary decree.

A "suit" is a proceeding which is instituted by the presentation of a plaint and is in its nature different from an "application made" under the Lim. Act.

An application which is to save limitation under Art. 182 (5), Lim. Act, must be made "to the proper Court for execution," a suit to have an order in claim case set aside cannot be treated as an application under Art. 182 (5).

A suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code cannot keep the execution proceedings pending when there has been a definite order of the executing Court dismissing the execution application: in such a case, if the decree-holder succeeds in the suit, he will have to file a fresh application for execution and re-attach the property. A plaint in such a suit cannot, therefore, be treated as an application, within the meaning of cl. 5 of Art. 182.

Nor can the filing of such a suit be an application to the proper Court for execution when the filing of the suit in the Court which has jurisdiction to execute the decree or in some other Court must depend upon the fortuitous circumstance of the value of the attached property. *MAUNG MAUNG v. —Art. 182 (5)—Application for execution to Court which passed the decree and not to transferee Court, whether to proper Court.

After a decree has been transferred to another Court for execution, the proper Court to which a subsequent application for execution should be made is the transferee Court, as that is the Court whose duty it then is to execute the decree so far as it can be executed by that Court. Consequently, an execution application to the Court transferring the decree is not one made to a proper Court. RAM KISEON RAM BHAKAT v. SATYA NARAIN BHAKAT Cal. 411

—Art. 182 (5)—"In accordance with law"—Application held not in accordance with law—Failure of Court to see whether requirements of rr. 11 to 14 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1909), are complied with—Decree-holder, if protected from consequences of time-barred application.

Although the duty is cast upon the Court under O. XXI, r. 17, Civil P. O., to see whether the requirements of rr. 11 to 14, are complied with, the decree-holder is not protected if the Court fails to do so, from the ordinary consequences which follow when his request to the Court for its assistance is barred by time.

It is a matter of policy laid down by the Legislature that applications to the Court for its assistance must be made in time whether that application takes the form of a plaint or an application in execution.

An application for execution dated February 1, 1932, which on the face of it was time-barred was not an execution application made in accordance with law, as it did not mention a previous execution application dated February 5, 1932, which it should have mentioned if the application of February 1, 1932, itself was to be in time. But the Court instead of complying with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 17, admitted the application and ordered notices to issue and costs to be deposited. In the subsequent application dated December 8, 1932, the decree-holder again failed to mention the application of February 5, 1932, but subsequently applied for amendment of the application:

Held, that the application of December 8, 1932, was barred and that there was no substance in allowing the amendment as the application of February 1, 1932, which omitted reference to the application of February 5, 1932, and which was consequently out of time was not in accordance with law and it therefore did not give fresh starting point for limitation. The fact that it was an error to allow the execution of February 1, 1932, did not make any difference. DOLARAM ARATMAL v. MULOMAL RADHAKIS INDAS Sind 835

—Art. 182 (5)—Step-in-aid—Application in accordance with law—Formal mistake about costs of previous application—Application, if not in accordance with law—Application rejected on this ground—If amounts to finding so as to act as res judicata—Res judicata.

A mistake in an execution application about the costs of the previous execution application in itself is no sufficient reason for holding that the application is not a step-in-aid of execution or is not made substantially in accordance with law.

Where an application is rejected, dismissed or struck off for mere formal defects or a bona fide mistake in furnishing details or on account of the decree-holder's absence, such an order cannot estop the decree-holder from showing that his application was not defective but in accordance with law. Rejection on the ground of decree-holder's absence and his failure to correct an unimportant inaccuracy in the costs does not amount to an express or implied finding that the application is not in accordance with law. Such a finding, therefore, cannot be res judicata. MOHAMMAD ABDUL SATTAH v. RAHMUDDIN Nag. 545

Before the Lim. Act was amended in 1927, the starting point for limitation was the date of an application made to a Court for execution of a decree or order. But after the amendment, the limitation runs from the final order passed by a Court on an application for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution of decree or order.

Where final order on an application for execution is passed committing the judgment-debtor to civil prison, but the judgment-debtor is released subsequently for non-payment of subsistence allowance, the date from which the limitation runs is the date of the final order committing the judgment-debtor to civil prison and the execution proceedings cannot be said to be pending till the judgment-debtor was in prison.

Madras City Tenants' Protection Act (III of 1922), ss. 1 (3), 2 (4), 3, 6, 12—Benefits of ss. 3, 6 and 12, when available—Tenancy held was not created before commencement of Act and Act did not apply.

The latter part of the definition of "tenant" in s. 2 (4), Mad. City Tenants' Protection Act, refers to persons who, without a tenancy title, continue in possession after the termination of the tenancy, and the benefit of the remaining sections including s. 12, cannot be of avail to tenants unless and until they have shown that the tenancy in question was created before the commencement of the Act within the meaning of s. 1 (3).

By lease dated October 18, 1912, A leased the plot of land in suit to B for a period of ten years from October 1, 1912, the tenant being at liberty to erect a superstructure on the land. Shortly before its expiry on September 30, 1922, there were negotiations which resulted in an agreement by A to give a fresh lease at an increased rent, in order that further building operations should go on. On February 1, 1923, the formal lease was executed, under which the plot of land was leased to B for a term of ten years from October 1, 1922, at an increased rent. It provided that the lessee should always and in any event be entitled to be paid the price of the superstructure built on the said plot of land before he surrendered possession of the land, either on the expiry of the lease thereby granted or any other future lease or at any time, and that the price should be fixed according to the market value of the buildings as at the time of ascertainment and payment. On the expiry of the lease the lessor claimed possession and offered the present value of the superstructure as it existed at the commencement of the lease. The lessee claimed the benefit of the Mad. City Tenants' Protection Act;

Held, that though the physical possession was continuous, the possession from October 1, 1922, was attributable to a new tenancy, which was formally embodied in the lease dated February 1, 1923. The tenancy in question was not therefore created before the commencement of the Act, and the Act did not apply. RANGANATHAM CHETTI v. ETHEIRAJULU NAYUDU PC 571

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 30, 38, 40, 178—Steps contemplated by ss. 30, 38 and 40, if can be taken in course of settlement proceedings.

There is nothing in the scheme of Chap XI, Madras Estates Land Act to restrict the authorities settling the rent to the system of payment theretofore in vogue. The provision in s. 178 against the commencement or continuation of proceedings under ss. 30, 38 and 40 of the Act during the pendency of settlement proceedings clearly implies the possibility that what could be done under these three sections might be done as part of the settlement proceedings. A. Section 172 of the Madras Estates Land Act, cannot be interpreted as giving powers of revision to the Board only after the re-publication under s. 170, cl. 3, had been made. All that s. 172 does is to fix the outer limit of time within which the powers of revision may be exercised. This does not necessarily imply that the Board has no power of interference before the re-publication. Its powers as an appellate authority under s. 171 can certainly be invoked and exercised independently of the question of confirmation by the Collector or re-publication under s. 170, cl. 3; under the provisions of s. 174 the orders passed under s. 171 are directed to be incorporated in the settlement record already published under s. 170 (3). Section 172 gives the Board powers of revision both suo motu and on the application of parties. Where the Board is satisfied that the proceedings before the Revenue Officer require to be set right, it need not wait till after the procedure under s. 170 has been gone through and can interfere at an earlier stage and give necessary directions. There is no warrant for saying that the Board has no jurisdiction to exercise its revisional powers till after the settlement record has been re-published after confirmation by the Collector. Section 172 only contemplates the Board directing a revision by the subordinate authority and not the fixing of rent by the Revenue Board itself. If, on the facts of any particular case, what the Board does in addition to what is contemplated by s. 172 amounts to little more than a mere arithmetical calculation or something of that kind, there is nothing in the nature of excess of jurisdiction in the exercise of such powers. Where, on the other hand, the Board proceeds to do something which is really more than a ministerial or arithmetical step and which if it had been directed to be done by the Revenue Officer would have involved a consideration of a number of matters which are not and cannot be before the Board at the time of passing the order, so much of the Board's order as goes beyond what is contemplated by s. 172 is done without jurisdiction.

By the order the Board of Revenue fixed the landlord's share at eighty-seven *kalam*s per veli instead of sixty-five *kalam*s fixed by the Collector and directed conversion into cash at certain average price per kalam subject to a deduction of fifteen per cent on account of the distance of the village from the nearest town market. The Sub-Collector was asked to work out money rents on the above basis:

Held, that what the Board did in the matter of fixing cash rent was not within the powers conferred upon it by s. 172. If it had thought that it would be proper to fix rents on a cash basis, it must have sent the papers back to the Revenue Officer to make a re-settlement on that basis and not merely given him a direction to carry out a simple process of conversion of paddy rent into money rent at a price fixed by the Board itself. A. Madras Gaming Act (III of 1930), ss. 3, 4 (1)—Payment or sharing profits in fulfilment of betting on horse race, whether gaming.

But, the section

does not say that the mere finding of gaming instruments in such a place shall be evidence of gaming. There is obviously a wide difference between a person being present at a particular place for the purpose of gaming and his gaming at the place. Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act (III of 1927 as amended by Act XII of 1935), s. 63 (2),—Appointment of additional or associate trustees and manager, whether ultra vires of Board.

The Amending Act XII of 1935 does not say that the amendment shall have retrospective effect or that the law must be deemed to have been always as laid down in the Amending Act. So the appointment of additional or associate trustees before the amendment is ultra vires of the Board.

The provisions in the scheme relating to the appointment of a manager by the Board and the allotment of important duties of management to him must be deemed to be ultra vires because they have the effect of placing the management of the institution in the hands of some one not appointed by the trustee and not responsible to him, and would thus in fact displace the trustee from the management of the affairs of the temple. *HINDU RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS BOARD v. Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act (III of 1918), ss. 5 (1), 20—Rules under s. 20—Rr. 16, 18, 22—Charge under s. 5 (1) not specifying whether milk in question was cow's or buffalo's—Certificate of analysis based on assumption that it was buffalo's—Sample found to contain 3·4 per cent of milk fat—Offence held not established.

The accused had been convicted of an offence punishable under s. 5, cl. 1 (d) of the Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act. The charge was that he sold milk below the standard of purity prescribed by Government. The charge did not state whether it was buffalo's milk or cow's milk that was said to have been sold by him contrary to law. The certificate of analysis by the Government Analyst was to the effect that the sample contained 60·5 parts of genuine milk, 35·0 parts of added water and 4·5 parts of cane sugar in a total of 100 parts. This opinion was based on the assumption that the milk that was sent as sample that is the milk that was sold by the petitioner, was sold as buffalo's milk. There was no basis for this assumption that it was buffalo's milk, that was sold. The sample was found to contain 3·4 per cent of milk fat. There was nothing to show that the quantity of solid found was below the prescribed minimum:

Held, that the sample in this respect of which the offence was said to have been committed must be dealt with as if it were cow's milk that was offered for sale or sold. The minimum percentage of milk fat was only 3 per cent, under r. 16. The sample contained 3·4 per cent milk fat. It could not therefore be said that the sample was below the minimum prescribed so far as milk fat was concerned. R. 18 did not apply and the offence had not been established. In re KRISHNA IYER Mad. 3

The fact that an item, the character of which is in dispute is mortgaged along with another item proved to be family land, will not raise a presumption that the disputed item was also family land unless it be shown that the mortgage itself was a borrowing for the benefit of the family. *MAMMILI KUNRI RAMAN KITAVU v. —Tarwad—Right of member to sue for removal of karnavan—Other members, if should be joined—Petition by one for leave to sue in forma pauperis to remove karnavan—Fact that suit would result in other member functioning as karnavan—Petition, if not bona fide

Every member of a tarwad has a right to see that the tarwad affairs are conducted by the karnavan properly, and if he finds that a karnavan has not been acting in the interests of the tarwad, he would have a right to sue for his removal. In such a suit other members need not be joined as plaintiffs. It is obvious, however, that when a member sues a karnavan for his removal, he is trying to enforce a right in which he is interested with the other members of the tarwad jointly, and he would apparently be doing so not only in his individual interest but in the interest of all the members of the tarwad as well or at all events he is taking a step which will not affect him alone but the other members of the tarwad also. It is, therefore, only proper that if he has not filed the suit in a representative capacity, he should implead them as parties to the action.

Where a member of a tarwad makes a petition for leave to sue in forma pauperis to remove the karnavan, the petition cannot be held to be not bona fide, merely because, as a result of the success of the suit, the other member would have to function as karnavan. *AYANOBHRI KOVILAKATH SANAKARA VARMA RAJA v. Minor—Contract of sale by guardian on behalf of minor—Purchaser, if can seek specific performance against minor.

A guardian's contract for sale or purchase made on behalf of the minor is not enforceable by or against the minor. The principle underlying is that a minor is not personally bound by any contract made on his behalf by his guardian. A contract for sale of immovable property does not of itself create an interest in or charge on such property. If it is a contract of purely personal nature and no personal liability can be imposed on the minor, it must logically follow that the minor cannot be compelled to perform the contract; for the same reason he cannot take advantage of the contract and ask for specific performance. There is another aspect to the question. In every case when there is refusal to implement the contract of sale by the guardian, the breach is committed by the guardian and never by the minor. The purchaser therefore can only claim compensation against the guardian and not against the minor or his property except in the case where the guardian uses the money obtained from the purchaser for the improvement of the minor's estate, a case which stands on a separate footing. The purchaser is not entitled to hold the minor personally responsible for the breach of contract of sale made by his guardian and he is not therefore entitled to claim compensation from him. Consequently s. 24-A of the Specific Relief Act, debars the purchaser from claiming the relief of specific performance against the minor. KRISHNA CHANDRA SHARMA v. RISHABHA KUMAR Nag. 156

Suit by next friend on behalf of minor dismissed with costs—No express direction in decree that next friend should pay costs—Estate of minor, if liable for costs—In execution of decree for costs property of minor attached—Minor paying money to raise attachment—Application for refund of such money, whether can be made by new next friend.

Where the plaintiff is a minor, and suit brought on his behalf by a next friend is dismissed with costs, if the Court intends the next friend to pay the costs, there should be an express direction to that effect. Where there is no such direction in the decree and the decree merely says: "The plaintiff's suit is dismissed and the plaintiff do pay to the defendants their costs of the suit," the decree must mean what it says and the estate of the minor plaintiff must remain liable to satisfy the costs. It is not necessary that the decree should state in so many words that the costs of the successful party are to be taken out of the estate of the minor losing party.

Where a suit filed on behalf of the minor plaintiff by his next friend is dismissed with costs and in execution of the decree for costs the property of the minor is attached and the minor pays money to raise the attachment, an application for the refund of the money so paid, on the ground that the decree could not be executed against the minor is maintainable by the new next friend. MULGRAND JIVRAJ v. Mortgage—Interest—Stipulation for payment of, in nature of penalty—Stipulation held in nature of penalty and not binding on mortgagor—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74.

A mortgage deed provided that the sum of Rs. 2,000 which was borrowed thereunder should be repaid in eight annual instalments of Rs. 250 each, such instalments to count both towards principal as well as interest on the entire sum. The stipulation for payment of interest ran as follows: that in default of payment of sums due in any instalment, the sum remaining unpaid on that date shall be added to the principal and the entire amount become payable at once irrespective of future instalments, the entire sum carrying interest at 1 per cent. per mensem compound with yearly rest.

Held, that there was a clear penalty which the parties could not have intended to be enforced as damages for breach of the contract to pay annual instalments. The stipulation which required payment of compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum was therefore not binding on the mortgagor. KURELLA RAMAMURTI v. NALAM SUBBARAO Mad. 440 (b)

There is a material difference between a case where cash is paid in satisfaction of the mortgage debt and where property is transferred in satisfaction thereof. In cases where cash is paid, the moment the money is appropriated, redemption takes place in fact, but where property is transferred, the redemption depends upon whether the title in the property sold in law has passed to the mortgagee or not. Where the satisfaction of a mortgage debt is brought about by transfer of property mortgaged, the mortgage debt is extinguished to the extent to which the transfer is valid. KISHEN GOPAL v. Redemption—Several co-mortgagors—Entire equity of redemption transferred by some of mortgagors to mortgagee—Effect of—Suit by other mortgagors is one for redemption and governed by Art. 148, Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

Where there are several co-mortgagors and the entire equity of redemption in the mortgage is transferred to the mortgagee by some only of the co-mortgagors, the possession of the mortgagee as regards other co-mortgagors remains only that of a mortgagee. It therefore follows that a suit by such co-mortgagors would be a suit for redemption and not a suit for possession on payment and would be governed by Art 148 of the Limitation Act.

The mortgagee who comes into possession of land as a mortgagee is not in a position to deny the rights of any of his mortgagors to redeem the mortgage so long as the equity of redemption or any part of it subsists. KISHEN GOPAL v. ABDUL LATIF KHAN

Suit on—Costs—Suit against mortgagors—Purchaser of mortgage property in execution of simple money decree made party—Suit not necessitated by any conduct on his part—His only defence being that he was not personally aware of mortgage—Whether can be made personally liable for costs of suit.

No doubt there is jurisdiction for the Court to award costs personally against a subsequent encumbrancer or a subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property. But before the Court can do so, there must be a finding that the suit was necessitated by any improper conduct on their part as having repudiated the title of the mortgagee or as having raised frivolous defences in the suit, thus enabling the plaintiff to incur more costs than were necessary.

In a suit against the mortgagors the purchaser of the mortgage property in a Court sale held in execution of a simple money decree was made a party. In the plaint the plaintiff alleged that before suit he called upon the purchaser to pay the debt due under the mortgage but he did not pay the same. The plaintiff prayed for a personal decree against the purchaser enabling him to recover the costs of the suit from him. The purchaser did not set up any defence in answer to the mortgage except stating that he was not personally aware of the mortgage and that he was obliged to add a plea that he was not personally liable for costs because the plaintiff claimed a personal decree against him. The Court awarded costs against him.

Held, that the suit was not necessitated by any conduct on the part of the purchaser and hence there was no justification for awarding costs against the purchaser. The mere fact that he did not comply with the notice of demand made upon him was not a reason recognized by law for awarding costs against him. AKELLA SURAYYA v. A Muhammadan woman's claim for dower is a simple money claim. A decree for dower obtained by the widow of a Muhammadan against the other heirs even though it may be realizable from the assets of the deceased does not create a charge against those assets unless the decree specifically creates such a charge.

Where therefore subsequent to the passing of a simple money decree in, a dower suit but pending appeal the heirs of the deceased Muhammadan mortgage the property of the deceased in their hands, bona fide for value, the mortgage is not affected by such a decree and the decree not having created a charge on the property s. 52, T. Sunnis—Option of puberty—Such right is prolonged till woman has knowledge of such right—But must be exercised within reasonable time of her knowledge—Burden of proving knowledge—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 108.

A woman's right of repudiating the marriage performed during her minority is prolonged amongst Sunni Muhammadans until she is acquainted with the fact that she has such a right. In other words the woman has the right of repudiating the marriage within reasonable time of her knowledge of the fact that she has the power to repudiate the marriage.

The fact, that a woman has knowledge of her marriage or of her right to exercise the option of puberty at a particular time, must be specially within her knowledge, and therefore the burden of proving such fact must, in view of the provisions of s. 108, Evi. Act, be on her. AHMAH HUSAIN v. AMIR BANO All. 837

Succession—Rule of—Custom, if can oust personal law—Burden of proof.

Per Tyabji, J.—In the case of Muhammadans the rule of succession must be according to their personal law, that is, Muhammadan Law, "the system of law which naturally follows from their religion," except in so far as this personal law is modified or is ousted by a valid and actually prevailing custom. Among Muhammadans the system of law which naturally follows from their religion is Muhammadan Law, and in every case where a custom at variance with Muhammadan Law is alleged to be prevailing, it must be shown that the body of persons claiming to be bound by that custom did definitely claim to be outside the system of law governing their other co-religionists.

A Muslim may, except in the cases of a few well-defined prohibitions, affect his entire rights by making declarations, a power given equally to men as well as to women. By the very act of professing the Muslim faith, a person embraces Islam, no matter whether he be a Christian or a Buddhist or of any other religion, and no matter what customs and practices or manner of living he may have been following up to that moment, and immediately becomes subject to Muhammadan law. This is in no way affected by the fact that where it is proved as a matter of fact that a Muhammadan and his ancestors had for a very long period not adopted the practices enjoined by Islam, but had been governed by ancient and not invalid customs, the customs actually practised and followed would be given effect to. Hence the Muslim agriculturists who desire to give up the customs by which they had been bound in the Punjab and to adopt Muhammadan Law, can do so by an express declaration to that effect. Under Muhammadan Law, there is no legal prohibition against a woman holding a mutwalliship, when a trust by its nature involves no spiritual duties such as a woman could not properly discharge in person or by deputy, and it is always a question of fact whether the duties attached to a particular office are so spiritual that they cannot be discharged by a female.

Where the duties of a mujavar consist of sweeping and cleansing the place, reading the fatiha, offering prayers and incense, and looking after the general management of the shrine, and on evidence it is found that these duties can be performed by females, then succession of a female to such mujavarsnip is not barred. The jurisdiction of the Court is confined entirely to cases in which the waqf property is situate within the limits of its jurisdiction. The only waqfs, which can be called upon to make a contribution to the Waqf Administration Fund, are the waqf to which, under the principal Act, the Court directing a contribution to be made has jurisdiction. There is nothing in the Act which extends the jurisdiction of the Court to cases in which the trustees reside within the district, or in which they apply income within the district. The only relevant fact to consider is the place where the waqf property is situate, and s. 3 of the Mussalman Waqf Act, 1925, and also s. 6-D of the Amendment Act, make it clear that the property of the waqf referred to in the sections is the corpus, and not the income. Where therefore the whole of the waqf property consisting of immovable property and shares in companies is situate in Burma but the mutwallis of the waqf reside within the jurisdiction of the Surat District Court, such Court cannot call upon the mutwallis to contribute to the Waqf Adminisseised of a suit for arrears of rent before it can allow that remission from the rent payable by an under-proprietor. The section clearly means that what the Court has to do in each case, when considering the question of remission, is first to determine as to what would be the amount to be allowed as a remission on equitable grounds and then to obtain the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner in respect thereof. The sanction of the Deputy Commissioner would naturally depend upon what the Court has determined to be an equitable remission. Both the Court and the Deputy Commissioner have to determine the question of remission judicially after giving due consideration to the facts of each individual case, and it is hardly conceivable that a general order of allowing remission in a particular locality was in the contemplation of the Legislature when it used the words "with the previous sanction of the Deputy Commissioner" in the section. SAKINA BEGUM v. The ejectment of a tenant contemplated by s. 108 (10), Oudh Rent Act, means the ejectment by the landlord, i. e., by the whole body of co-sharers where the tenant holds his tenancy from all of them. The landlord of the tenant is the person or persons to whom the rent is payable by the tenant. A partition necessarily affects the interest of a mortgagee of an undivided share, since after the partition his security is upon the divided share of the separate allotment. The mortgagee of an undivided share might be prejudiced if that share did not receive a proper allotment in severalty, and it is for the benefit of all other persons interested in the joint property that such a mortgagee should be bound by the allotment. Hence it will in general meet the case if he is allowed to attend and be heard at that stage at which the making of a proper allotment is effected.

While the purchaser at an execution sale under a mere money decree gets no more than the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor at the date of the sale, the purchaser under a mortgage decree gets the right, title and interest in the mortgaged subjects which the mortgagor had at the date of the mortgage and charged thereby. Buying the mortgaged property free from incumbrances he gets, as it is sometimes put, the title both of the mortgagee and of those interested in the equity of redemption. He is not a mere successor-in-interest of the owner of the equity of redemption at the date of the sale. JADUNATH ROY v. PARAMESWAR MULLICK P C 234

—Suit for—Rights of parties added after preliminary decree, if can be adjusted at time of final decree.

If the mortgagee has proceeded to a sale pending partition, the purchaser would become a necessary party to the partition suit.

A partition suit, in which a preliminary decree has been passed, is still a pending suit and the rights of the parties who are added after the preliminary decree, have to be adjusted at the time of the final decree.

A mortgagee of an undivided share obtained a decree against B, the son of the deceased mortgagor and purchased the property on January 11, 1930, and the sale was confirmed on February 19, 1930. In the meanwhile a partition suit was brought on August 30, 1929, to which B his mother and an unmarried sister were made parties. On October 1, 1929, a preliminary decree for partition was passed declaring the share of B subject to the charge for maintenance and other expenses of his mother and sister. The mortgagee was neither made a party nor was any decision given as to mortgagee's rights, in the decree. The mortgagee applied by applications, one made before execution sale and other after the sale but before confirmation, to be made party to partition suit and on appeal from their rejection, the High Court directed that they should be made parties "as from April 12, 1930, on which date their application was rejected," the proceedings taken before the said date, being binding upon them just as much as they would be binding upon their predecessor-in-interest." The mortgagee thereupon applied to set aside the preliminary decree so far as it declared charges upon the property but this was rejected in view of the High Court's order. The mortgagee then applied for separate allotment of his share and the allotment was made without making any charge on the property. The High Court set aside this order on the ground that in view of the previous order of that Court the preliminary decree could not be altered or modified:

Held, that the mortgagee owing to his purchase of the property was a necessary party and the previous order of the High Court need not be construed as holding that after the execution sale the ladies had the same rights against the purchasers as they had had against B's interest in the equity of redemption. The ladies' interest in the equity of redemption equally with B's must be regarded as having passed to the mortgagee. At no time was it correct to treat the mortgagee as mere assignee of B's interest. Before the sale his interest was as mortgagee and was not represented in the suit. After the sale when he was made party, his interest as complete owner was before the Court—an interest which at no time had belonged to B. At no time was it correct or sufficient to regard B as mortgagee's "predecessor-in-title," upon any question as between B and other persons claiming to be interested in the equity of redemption, a decision charging or limiting his interest had no bearing upon the rights of the mortgagee whether before the execution sale or afterwards. The property purchased by the mortgagee could not therefore be charged with the maintenance of B's mother and sister. JADUNATH ROY v. PARAMESWAR MULLICK

—s. 69—Suit by plaintiff in respect of money due to him from defendant on basis of transactions in unregistered partnership between them—Partnership claimed to be dissolved before suit—Sum specified—Suit, if maintainable.

The language of sub-s. (1) and (2) of s. 69, Partnership Act, is wide enough to cover suits relating to a dissolved firm and sub-s. (1) covers a suit by a plaintiff suing in respect of a right vested in him or acquired by him as a partner in a firm, and it is not essential that the firm should be actually in existence at the date when the suit was instituted. The words in sub-s. (1) "suing as a partner in a firm" include a suit on a cause of action which is based on a right acquired solely as a partner in a firm, and where the firm was unregistered, no such suit can be brought.

The plaintiff sued the defendant in respect of money which he alleged was due to him on the basis of transactions in an unregistered partnership into which he and the defendant had entered. It was claimed that the partnership was dissolved and that on a calculation, as the venture had been unprofitable, the defendant owed the plaintiff a specified sum of money:

Held, that the suit was barred under s. 69, Partnership Act. CHHOTLAL v. GOPALDAS Nag. 624

—s. 69—Suit for dissolution by partner of unregistered firm—His right to decree for accounts, if affected.

If a partner of an unregistered firm sues for the dissolution of partnership, he is entitled to the ordinary decree which the Court passes in such a suit. Provision is made for this decree in O. XX, r. 15, Civil Procedure Code. The right of a partner therefore of an unregistered firm to a decree for accounts in a suit for dissolution remains unaffected by the provisions of s. 69, Partnership Act, in view of the proviso contained in sub-s. (3) thereof. A partner of unregistered firm has a right in a suit for dissolution of partnership to include a claim for accounts also and he need not bring two separate suits for them. *SATIBA MAL v. Abetment has a reference both to the person or persons abetted, and to the offence or offences the commission of which is abetted. Section 117, I. P. of a single person or a specified individual or individuals, and covers the case of the abetment of a class of persons also. It does not apply only if "no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such abetment." The words "such abetment" evidently refer to the abetment of the offence specified in the section itself, namely an offence punishable with death or transportation for life, and only ss. 121 and 131, provide for the punishment of the abetment of such offences. There is no express provision in the Code for the punishment of the abetment of murder. Hence, the abetment of the commission of murder, whether by a single individual or by a class of persons exceeding ten, falls under s. 115. In the latter case, it may fall under s. 117 also, but as s. 117 prescribes a lesser punishment, s. 115 is the more appropriate provision for such an offence.

Obiter.—If a person abets the commission of murder by the public, and murder is committed in consequence of the abetment, it cannot be said that the offence does not fall under s. 117, but the appropriate section for such an offence would be s. 109. EMPEROR v. LAVJI MANDAN Bom. 413 (b)

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 51, 57—Official Assignee establishing that transaction within contemplation of s. 57 took place after commencement of insolvency—Onus to prove that it took before adjudication.

Under the doctrine of "relation back" the property of an insolvent on the making of the order of adjudication vests in the Official Assignee as from the commencement of the insolvency, that is to say, from the date of the act of insolvency upon which the adjudication is made. As from that date the insolvent ceases to be owner of the property and cannot deal with it. He cannot make payments to creditors or give good and valid discharges. Section 57 of the Presi. Towns Insol. Act, however, provides an exception to the doctrine by affording protection to bona fide transactions taking place between the commencement of the insolvency and the date of the order of adjudication in those cases where the person with whom such transaction takes place had no notice of the presentation of the petition by or against the debtor. When the Official Assignee has established that a transaction within the contemplation of s. 57 took place after the commencement of the insolvency, the onus lies on the person seeking to uphold the transaction to prove that it took place before adjudication and that he had no notice of the presentation of the petition. Provincial Insolvency Act—conold.

The provisions of s. 25 relate to the defence that the debtor may put up even though the petitioning creditor satisfies the conditions required by the Insolvency Act and therefore it cannot be said that his ability or inability to pay his debts is not a circumstance into which a Court may enter when once the act of insolvency has been proved. It is the duty of the Court to enter into the matter and if satisfied that the debtor is able to pay his debts, must dismiss the creditors' petition. BHAGWAN DAS v. MOHAMMAD NAWAZ SHAH Lah. 489

—s. 25, 6 (6)—Unliquidated assets—Assets realizable at creditor's instance being less than debts due, debtor not willing to pay debts due for long time nor making efforts to liquidate assets—Debtor is deemed to be unable to pay debts.

The mere presence of unliquidated assets does not necessarily prove that these assets are capable of being liquidated. Unliquidated assets cannot be sufficient to discharge debts until they are liquidated and until those steps are taken, whether willingly or unwillingly by the debtor, it cannot be said that, at the time when the petition is put in praying for his insolvency, he is able to discharge his debts in the ordinary sense of the term, namely that he is able to pay them off by making legal tender of the sum demanded. The fact that he might pay them off if a purchaser was available and if he had time given to convert his assets into cash, does not affect the question whether at the time of the presentation of the petition and up to the time when this point arises for decision he is or is not able to pay his debts. Hence although he has assets which if liquidated would provide sufficient money to discharge his debts, yet if he has no liquidated assets with which to pay his debts at present, he must be held not to be able to pay his debts and hence liable to adjudication as an insolvent. The mere fact that the "value" of the immovable property owned by the debtor is in excess of his liabilities is not sufficient to prove his ability to pay his debts regardless of all other considerations. A person may own very valuable properties but they may not be marketable at all or there may be no prospect of any purchaser forthcoming to buy them within a reasonable time even though the owner has made and is willing to make every possible effort to raise money on them to meet his liabilities. It will be idle to contend in such cases, that the mere fact that the debtor owns valuable properties is per se sufficient to justify a finding that he is "able to pay his debts." What he has to show in each particular case is whether he possesses such realizable assets, as can within a reasonable time be made available to meet all his liabilities. Where it is obvious that the assets realizable at the instance of the creditors are much less than the debts due to them, and there is no reasonable prospect of the debtor paying them by voluntary alienation of his land and the debts have been due for a considerable time; but no effort whatever has been made by the debtor to pay off the creditors nor has he any present intention of paying them anything by liquidating any of his assets, it must be held that the debtor is "unable to pay his debts" and that no "other sufficient cause" has been shown under s. 25 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for the dismissal of the creditors' petition. BHAGWAN DAS v. Assignee—Creditor of son, whether can attach son's share without leave of Insolvency Court—Such attachment, if defeats Official Assignee's right to sell son's share to discharge father's lawful debts.

Section 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, refers only to the property of the insolvent and the prohibition against the institution of legal proceedings without the leave of the Court refers to proceedings with regard to the insolvent's property. Although the right of an insolvent Hindu father to sell his son's share in the family property to discharge his own lawful debts vests in the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver; the son's share does not vest in him and hence proceedings can be taken in respect of the son's interest in the family property without the leave of the Insolvency Court. The right to sell the son's interest only exists so long as the son's interests in the family property exists. If the interest has been sold or if there has been a lawful attachment, which has the same effect, there exists no property over which the power can be exercised. While the interest of the son remains unsold or un-attached, the Official Assignee has the right to sell the properties for the lawful debts of the insolvent father, but unless he exercises his right, he may lose it and he loses it if the interest of the son is attached by a creditor of the son. *ARUNACHALAM CHETTIAR v. If the word "assets" used in relation to insolvency proceedings is not qualified in any way, as in the expression "future assets", it is generally understood to mean the amount actually in existence available for division among the creditors of the insolvency.

The effect of s. 42 of the Pro. Insol. An order directing that the insolvent's discharge should be suspended until such time as his scheduled debts are fully paid is one without jurisdiction. *O. FLEMING v. There need not be some image or idol or some dedication in order that the particular "Than" should be considered to be a religious place where the public had a right of worship. No particular act is necessary to signify a dedication. It is enough if the public have been going there and making offerings. The mere fact that these offerings were made to a Brahmin family does not show that it was a case of Brahmin family "carving out a livelihood from these offerings." Such offerings are always handed over to Brahmin Pujaris and the fact that the Pujaris take the offerings does not in any way detract from the right of the persons who make the offerings to continue to do so. —Sch. I, Art. 1—Document, when comes

In order to bring a document within the mischief of Art. 1, Sch. I of the Stamp Act, what has to be established is that it is an acknowledgment of a debt created in order to supply evidence of such debt. This article requires something more than an acknowledgment of a debt. The primary question is whether the document was brought into existence with the "dominant intention" of supplying evidence of the debt. The fact that the document is apt to serve other purposes does not absolve the Court from enquiring, as it is enjoined to do by Art. 1, what was the purpose for which it was meant.

There was a running account between A and B throughout the period of transaction consisting on the one hand of the loans by A to B and on the other hand of price of goods supplied by B to A. It was the practice at the end of each month, for A to submit B a statement. Each statement opened by bringing forward from previous month the balance of the account. The statement then stated the cash loans made by A to B and on the other side the value of the goods supplied by B to A. At the end a balance was struck below which B put his signature accompanied by no other writing and handed it over to A which then remained in his possession:

Held, that taking into consideration the course of business between these two parties, and the facts that these transactions were continuing transactions, and at no point of time was it ever contemplated that any of these particular balances, except possibly the last one, would ever become payable in cash by B to A, the real purpose for which these documents were brought into existence was not the supply of the evidence of an actual debt, that that money was actually due, but simply as one of a series of statements of accounts which for the convenience of the parties were exchanged at fixed intervals. It was not, therefore, a document required to be stamped under Art. 1, Sch. I, Stamp Act. ROSHAN N. M. A. KARIM OMRE & Co. v. MOHAMED EBRAHIM

A lease may be from month to month and yet be for an indefinite period. The language of the Stamp Act is perfectly clear and it is only when a term of less than 12 months' duration is specified that a lease can be said to purport to be for such a period and therefore chargeable as such. Where no term is fixed, the document is ex facie one for an indefinite period.

Even if a document is such that it could not be deemed to be a lease within the meaning of s. 105, T. P. Act, it would still come within the Stamp

A lease of a certain house was granted on a monthly rental of Rs. 30. The instrument did not fix a term but it was stated that either party could terminate the tenancy on giving one month's notice:

Much of the usefulness of the statutory power conferred by s. 307, Succession Act, on executors in India would be nullified, if a duty to enquire into facts outside the will as they existed immediately prior to the testators' death was imposed on parties dealing with executors.

A testator who was the owner of a printing, publishing and book-selling business which he had started and carried on, died leaving a will whereby he had appointed two of his sons executors and directed them to carry on the business among other things. The property contained among other properties some immovable property used as the family dwelling house and for printing press. The executors subsequently executed a mortgage of these properties. The mortgage deed made a reference to the will and the authority given to the executors to carry on the business and stated that the amount was required to fulfil the contract made with the Govt. for the exclusive licence to publish certain Govt. publications:

Held, on construction of the will that the will did not impose any restriction on the statutory power of disposal.

Negligence is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. The ordinary, prudent and reasonable man is not required to drive on the assumption that he will meet with improper obstructions on the highway. Merely because the ordinary man knows that at times others unlawfully place obstacles on the highway, drive at a furious pace, turn across the road without giving the recognized sign, he is not to be penalized, when he is behaving as a reasonable and prudent man would.

Where the employees are housed by their employer for the convenience of his trade in the houses built on his own land, the relationship between them are not those of landlord and tenant at all. These workmen therefore are mere licensees of the employer and the entire property is in the occupation of the employer. If, therefore, a third person enters upon such land without the permission and against the wishes of the employer, the burden of showing that the entry was lawfully justified lies on such a person.

In a suit for a declaration and injunction it was alleged by the plaintiff that the defendant accompanied by some persons armed with lathis was trespassing on the plaintiff's land and was staging demonstrations thereon which were calculated to overawe and intimidate the plaintiff and his workmen:

Where those partners arrange that the remaining partners are to be entitled to the debts due to the firm, such an arrangement amounts —ss. 6, 130—Claim to debt which cannot be conferred by action is not property—Part of debt, whether assignable—Act, if makes distinction between whole debt and part of debt—Held on facts that assignment was of a distinct and separate debt and not part of debt.

Per Fasl Ali, J.—Under the T. P. Act, "debts" are actionable claims. It follows that a claim to a debt which cannot be enforced by action, as for example, when the debt is barred by limitation, is not property. The same limitation must apply to a part of a debt; and, in order to determine whether or not it is property, whether an action can be sustained to recover it. Thus if claim to a part of a debt cannot be enforced under O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C., it is not an actionable claim and s. 130 can have no application to it.

The T. P. Act does not recognise any distinction between a whole debt and part of a debt. Both may be transferred under that Act, if they come under the category of "actionable claims" as an actionable claim is "property." The transferee of a part of a debt may, however, find that what is transferred to him is not an actionable claim as under O. II, r. 2, Civil P. C. a single cause of action cannot be allowed to be split up into several causes of action. Order II, r. 2 being a rule of procedure, it does not affect the right of transfer, that is to say, it cannot make what is transferable non-transferable. It does, however, bar the right of suit in certain cases and it may prevent the transferee of a part of a debt from enforcing his claim and thereby make the transfer nugatory:

Held, on facts that the assignment was not an assignment of part of a debt but was in substance and in fact an assignment of a distinct and separate debt. It was accordingly a valid assignment which gave the assignee a right to sue. DURGA SINGH v. KESHO LAL Pat. 514

The basis of the doctrine of lis pendens is that parties to a suit cannot be allowed to shorten the arms of the Court in dealing with the suit by transfers to a third party.

Ordinarily a suit by a Hindu wife for maintenance against her husband is a personal suit, and any purchaser of the family property during the pendency of the suit is not affected by the rule of lis pendens. But the doctrine of lis pendens does apply to a suit for maintenance by a Hindu widow in which she claims to have her maintenance made a charge on specific immovable property and a decree is passed creating a charge on such property. Although in the administration of a Hindu's estate, binding debts would take precedence, over mere claims for maintenance, or residence, on the part of the female members of the family; and a mortgage of family property for the satisfaction of ancestral debts binding on the family is not affected by any subsequent charge created on that property for widow's maintenance, yet the sale of the property in favour of the mortgagee during the pendency of the widow's suit for maintenance claiming maintenance to be made a charge on the property is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens and is subject to the final decree in the widow's suit. It is true that if such a creditor institutes a suit to avoid a transfer, he must do so "on behalf of or for the benefit of all the creditors." The reason of the rule is that the debtor should not be harassed by a multiplicity of suits by each and every creditor. But this does not mean that the creditor, even when he is defendant, must defend the suit on behalf of the whole body of creditors. He may plead s. 53, T. P. Act, as a personal defence to the suit against him, and it is not necessary that he must file a representative suit to avoid the transfer. The addition of para 4 to s. 53, sub s. (1), by amendment of 1929 makes no difference, and it has no application to a creditor who has to defend a suit filed against him by a plaintiff claiming under a transfer voidable under s. 53. It is, therefore, open to the defendant to resist the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the assignment taken by him is voidable at his option. BAI HAKIMBU v. DAYABHAI RUGHNATH

— s. 53—Transfer by judgment-debtor to delay or defeat his creditor decree-holder—It is voidable at decree-holder's option even if he may subsequently become auction-purchaser.

Under s. 53, T. P. Act, only a defeated or delayed creditor or a subsequent transferee has the option to impeach the transfer. An auction-purchaser, who is not the decree-holder himself, is not a creditor of the judgment-debtor, and it cannot be said that the transfer was intended to delay or defeat him, since he stepped in after the transfer by operation of law. Nor is he a subsequent transferee within the meaning of sub-s. (2). If, however, a person can prove that he was the creditor and decree-holder of the judgment-debtor and the assignment of the property made by the judgment-debtor was intended to delay or defeat him, then the assignment is voidable at his option, though he may subsequently become an auction-purchaser. The transfer of property to one creditor for a price far in excess of the debt due to him and the retention of the excess amount for his own benefit indicate an intent to defeat or delay the other creditors, especially when he has no other property left.

Where title in the property has passed to vendee notwithstanding the non-payment of part of purchase money, although in a suit for possession by the vendee of immovable property it is not competent to the Court to pass a decree for possession conditional on the vendee paying the balance of the purchase money, it is open to the Court, while decreeing possession to the vendee to incorporate in the decree the statutory charge under s. 55(4)(b) of the Transfer of Property Act, in favour of the vendor for the unpaid purchase money. It is true that the unpaid vendor in India is only entitled to a statutory charge provided for under s. 55(4)(b) and that the vendee under s. 55(1)(f) is entitled to possession, but there is no reason why the unpaid vendor should be driven to a separate suit to recover his unpaid purchase money. When he has a charge on the property which he is called upon to deliver to the purchaser, that charge continues to operate upon the property even when the possession of it passes to the vendee. It would therefore obviously be the proper course, to avoid multiplicity of litigation, to declare in the decree granting possession to the vendee that it is subject to the charge of the vendor to the extent of the purchase money that remains to be paid. If the decree incorporates this charge it would be open to the vendor to enforce it by seeking execution of that decree SHOBHALAL v. SIDHDLAL Nag 169

—s. 55 (4) (b)—Unpaid vendor's charge—English and Indian law, difference between.

The equity which arises in favour of the vendor who has not received his purchase money is no doubt recognised in English Law which gives him a lien, that is a right to enforce payment out of the interest he has transferred and this lien continues even after he has parted with the legal estate. The reason is that as soon as the contract of sale is made, the seller is deemed to part with the equitable estate, but in India contract of sale does not of itself create interest in or charge on such property, (s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act) In India the vendor is no doubt entitled to a charge for unpaid purchase money but that is a right which comes into existence not at the date of the contract for sale but on the completion of the conveyance. This charge is created by the statute. Thus while in England the vendor's lien is a creature of equity and is capable of being moulded to suit the circumstances of each case, the statutory charge is rigorous and inflexible. *SHOBHALAL v. Whether a deed is a mortgage by conditional sale within the meaning of s. 58 (c), T. P. Act, or an out and out sale is a question which falls to be determined on a consideration of the terms of the deed itself and of the surrounding circumstances.

A vendor executed a sale deed by which she conveyed the property in dispute to the vendees for certain sum. The deed contained a condition that if she should re-pay the amount of the sale consideration to the vendees within one year, the vendees would be bound to re-transfer the property to her provided she paid the money out of her pocket. In other words it was a condition of the transaction that the obligation to re-transfer would not bind the vendees if the vendor mortgaged or transferred the property to a third party for the purpose of raising the money to pay back the amount of the sale consideration to the vendees. In the earlier part of the deed there was a recital of the fact that the property was subject to prior encumbrances and that as the creditors were making pressing demands it was proper to sell the property to pay off the debt.

Held, that the terms of the document were consistent only with an intention upon the part of the executant to sell the property absolutely and to retain for herself the right to repurchase within one year. BISHAN LAL v. BANWARI LAL All. 487

—s. 58 (c)—Mortgage by conditional sale and sale with condition of re-purchase—Difference.

A mortgage by conditional sale is transaction essentially different from a sale with a condition of re-purchase. In a sale with a condition for re-purchase, the ownership vests in the transferee from the date of the document and there is no question of any debt being in existence after the transaction. In a case of mortgage by conditional sale, the debt subsists and a right to redeem remains with the debtor. ABDUL LATIF v. ABDUL GANI SERANG Cal. 393

The word "transfer" in s. 100 as amended must be read as defined in s. 5. This definition cannot include an auction-purchaser as he is not a person to whom the judgment-debtor has conveyed his property. The agreement which provides that in default of payment, of maintenance by one party to the plaintiff, the latter would be at liberty to cultivate the fields by taking possession of the same, the intention is that the plaintiff is to look to the profits from this land for her maintenance, for a particular period. That clearly creates a charge. It does not amount to a mortgage, for there is no transfer of any interest in the property charged and such a charge cannot be enforced by sale of the land. When the parties themselves expressly contract that the remedy for default in payment shall be delivery of possession for a particular period, namely during the lifetime of the charge holder and not sale, the Courts would not be justified in substituting a totally different contract for the one made.

Where the property thus charged was mortgaged, the mortgagee having the constructive notice of the charge and there being default in payment of maintenance, the charge was sought to be enforced against the mortgagees:

Held, that the decree should approximate as near as may be to a decree for foreclosure; that is to say, the defendant must be given the chance of redemption if he desired to keep the property in his possession. The relief was an equitable one and so could be moulded to suit the requirements of the case. The possession of a mortgagee who takes with constructive notice of the charge, is that of a trustee, or to be more accurate resembles that of a trustee, under s. 91 of the Trusts Act. Consequently, he is as much bound to fulfil the obligation which attaches to this property as the mortgagor himself. An equitable lien arises under the law.

Whether the matter falls squarely within a 100 Transfer of Property Act, or whether it comes under a more general rule of law, the burden is on the transferee to establish that he is a bona fide transferee for value without notice.

Where a mortgagee knows about the law of registration, and also that if he wants to make sure that the property mortgaged to him was free from encumbrances, it is necessary for him to search the registers and yet while actually instituting a search or rather causing one to be made, refrains from making the same, his conduct can only be regarded as wilful abstention.

Where the registers of the Registrar contain a reference to a particular agreement creating a charge on particular property on the date on which they were examined on behalf of the mortgagee, an omission to look at the entries against this property and to look into them carefully must be held to be due either to wilful abstention or to gross negligence and the mortgagee must be held to have constructive notice of the charge. *Renukabei v. Trust—Public trust—Dedication—Nature of evidence to prove—Inference from user—Value of public user as evidence of dedication—Held, that grant was not made by way of trust for public religious purpose but to grantees and his heirs in perpetuity.

It would, be an error in method if the subsequent history of the temple is not looked at in the light of the grant of the property. While it is certainly possible that in the course of years the temple should have been so dealt with as to become dedicated for the benefit of the Hindu public as a public temple, such a dedication requires to be proved. Where the general effect of the evidence is that the family have treated the temple as a family property, dividing the various forms of profit whether offerings or rents, closing it so as to exclude the public from worship when marriage or other ceremonies required the attendance of the members of the family at its original home, an erecting samadhs to the honour of its dead, in these circumstances, it is not enough to deprive the family of their private property to show that Hindus willing to worship have never been turned away even that the deity has acquired considerable popularity among Hindus of the locality or among persons resorting to the annual mela. Worshipers are naturally welcome at a temple because of the offerings they bring and the repnte they give to the idol; they do not have to be turned away on pain of forfeiture of the temple property as having become property belonging to a public trust. Facts and circumstances, in order to be accepted as sufficient proof of dedication of a temple as a public temple, must be considered in their historical setting and dedication to the public is not to be readily inferred when it is known that the temple property was acquired by grant to an individual or family. Such an inference, if made from the fact of user by the public, is hazardous, since it would not in general be consonant with Hindu sentiments or practice that worshippers should be turned away; and as worship generally implies offerings of some kind it is not to be expected that the managers of a private temple should, in all circumstances, desire to discourage popularity. The value of public user as evidence of dedication depends on the circumstances which give strength to the inference that the user was as of right.

Held, that the grant was not a grant to the idol or an endowment of a temple or a gift made by way of trust for a public religious purpose. The grant was to the grantee and his heirs in perpetuity. The reference to the grantee's heirs, and the Arabic terminology naslin ba'da naslin wa batnan ba'da batnan (descendant after descendant and generation after generation) were not reconcilable with the view that the grantor was in effect making a waqf for a Hindu religious purpose, even if it be assumed that this was not otherwise an untenable hypothesis. *BHAGWAN DIN v. relief under the Act is given to the landlord who is the owner of the encumbered estate. Ordinarily in a suit, relief is granted to the plaintiff in the suit. The landlord must, therefore, in view of the wordings of the Preamble, be regarded as the plaintiff in the proceedings under the Act, and the position of the creditor is that of the defendant. If therefore a claimant creditor dies during the pendency of the proceedings before the Special Judge, r 4 and not r. 3 of O. XXI, Civil P. O., applies. The omission to bring on record the legal representatives of the deceased creditor has the effect of causing an abatement of the debtor's application only so far as the legal representatives of the deceased creditor are concerned and not of extinguishing the claim of the creditor. GOKARAN SINGH v. It is clear from O. XXI, rr. 5 and 6, Civil Procedure Code, that the proceedings in connection with an application for transfer of the decree start with an application for transfer to the Court which passed the decree and end when that Court has complied with the requirements of r. 6 of O. XXI. Thereafter no proceeding remains pending in that Court. It may be that, the execution Court does not on an order of transfer lose its jurisdiction over the execution proceedings for certain purposes but it is very different from saying that the execution proceedings remain pending in that Court. Hence where the judgment-debtor makes an application under s. 4, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, after the decree is transferred for execution by the Court at Unao in Oudh which passed the decree to the Court at Oomilla in Bengal and an order has been made by the Collector under s. 6 of that Act, there are no proceedings pending at the date of the order under s. 6 in the Court at Unao and cl. Clause (6) of s. 14, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, makes no distinction between a case where the prior debt (principal plus interest), of a date earlier than December 31, 1916, is renewed by the successor-in-interest of the original debtor, and a case where that liability is undertaken by a person other than such legal representative.

A mortgaged certain property to B for Rs 20,000 on April 26, 1915. He then mortgaged the same property together with other property to C for one lakh rupees on May 26, 1921, leaving out of the consideration a sum of Rs. 20,000 for payment to A. C did not pay this amount. C then executed a mortgage on July 28, 1923, in favour of A for Rs. 30,000. The principal amount of Rs. 20,000 and interest thereon up to that date amounting to Rs. 1,831-14-9 was set off towards the mortgage consideration and a sum of Rs. 8,115-1-3 was received in cash. The estate of C went under the management of Court of Wards and the manager applied under s. 4, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act. A claimed Rs. 63,958 on the basis of his mortgage:

Held, that the principal amount for the purposes of s. 14 consisted of Rs. 20,000 originally advanced by A on April 26, 1915, and Rs. 8,115-1-3 further advanced in cash on July 28, 1923, both of which were still due at the date of the application. Under s. 14 (4) (a) the claimant was not entitled to more than that amount as interest. the contractor, the principal is not liable to compensate such workmen.

Under s. 3, in spite of there being wilful disobedience on the part of the workman concerned, an employer may be liable in respect of injury which results in death provided the accident arose out of and in the course of a person's employment. In considering this question the ambit or scope of a man's employment must be looked at in relation to the contract which he has made with his employer. There is one test which is always applicable, and it is this: Was it part of the injured person's employment to hazard, to suffer, or to do that which caused his injury? If yes, the accident arose out of his employment.

In a case where the workman met with his death when he was doing the very thing which he was employed to do, the mere fact that he had no right to be working in the place where he was when he met his death, does not show that the accident did not arise out of and in course of employment and the employer would in such case be liable to compensation under s. 3. LEE SHI v. FORFEITURE ON BANKRUPTCY

Testators not infrequently insert in their wills a provision that the interest of any beneficiary is to determine if he assigns, charges or otherwise disposes of the property settled upon him, or becomes bankrupt or does something whereby it would become payable to or vested in some other person. Such a clause is generally both easy to understand and to apply. Some doubts have, however, arisen as to the effect of the clause where, at the date of the testator's death, the beneficiary in question was a bankrupt but obtains his discharge before any moneys are actually paid to him. These doubts have now been cleared up by Lord Justice Luxmoore's judgment in Re Walker, Public Trustee v. Walker (161 L. T. Rep. 223). This decision clearly explains the operation of such a clause, both when the beneficiary has his bankruptcy annulled and when he obtains his discharge.

Until the recent decision, the authorities had all dealt with the position when the bankruptcy was annulled. The legal result of such annulment was considered by Lord Hatherly in White v. Chitty (1 Eq. 372). In this case a life interest had been given by the testator to a son but such interest was to cease on bankruptcy. The son was bankrupt at the testator's death. The bankruptcy was annulled within four months of the death and before any moneys became payable to the son. In these circumstances the learned judge held that the effect of the annulment was to prevent the operation of the forfeiture clause.

The matter was again considered in Ancona v. Waddell (40 L. T. Rep. 31; 10 Ch. D. 157). In this case a share of residue was given to a beneficiary by the will, which contained a clause of forfeiture in case the beneficiary should become insolvent or be declared bankrupt. The beneficiary was a bankrupt at the death of the testator, but the bankruptcy was annulled within five months, before any income became payable to the beneficiary. Vice-Chancellor Hall held that there had been no forfeiture. He said that the test was not whether in fact the money had been paid over or how the money actually stood, but it was whether "it could be said that there was any actual income of the share which could be treated as payable to or retained for or appropriated for the benefit of this residuary legatee."

In Re Forder (137 L. T. Rep. 538; (1927) 2 Ch. 291), Mr. Justice Olauson, as he then was, had to consider the position of an undischarged bankrupt in the following circumstances. Under the will of his mother, E. F. was entitled to a share of the income of her residuary estate, and in addition, in certain contingencies, to the whole capital. The will contained a provision that in the event of any beneficiary becoming bankrupt or assigning or charging his or her share, such beneficiary should forfeit such share. At the death of the testatrix E. F. was an undischarged bankrupt; after four months the bankruptcy was annulled. This summons was taken out to determine whether E. F. had forfeited his interest by reason of his bankruptcy, and if so, whether the annulment thereof operated to avoid such forfeiture.

On the hearing of the summons by Mr. Justice Olauson, it appeared from the evidence that during the period which elapsed between the death of the testatrix and the annulment of the bankruptcy, there was no income available for distribution. In these circumstances the learned judge held that, although the share and interest of E. F. had vested in possession, yet as the annulment occurred before any rights arising by reason of the bankruptcy were sought to be enforced, and as no income was paid or could have been paid in respect of his interest, the annulment was in time to save his interest under the will from forfeiture. Upon appeal further evidence was called, showing that during the crucial period income in fact was available for distribution. This income, but for the forfeiture clause, would have vested in E. F.'s trustee in bankruptcy, consequently the annulment was not in time to save the forfeiture.

The Effect of Discharge.

In Re Walker (sup) Lord Justice Luxmoore had to consider the position where the bankruptcy was not annulled, but the beneficiary obtained his discharge. In this case the testator had given to his brother an annuity during his life or until he should become bankrupt or do something whereby the income would become payable to some other persons. In the event of the failure of these trusts in the lifetime of the annuitant, there was a gift over of the annuity to his children.

The testator's brother was adjudicated bankrupt in 1937. On the 15th November, 1938, he applied for his discharge and an order was made on that date suspending his discharge for a month and discharging him as from the 15th December, 1938. On the 16th November, 1938, the testator died. His will was duly proved by the Public Trustee on the 14th March, 1939. In these circumstances, the Public Trustee took out an originating summons for the determination of the question whether the life interest of the brother had determined by reason of his bankruptcy.

It was strenuously contended that as the brother had obtained his discharge before any grant of probate had been taken out to the testator's estate, no payment could have been made to the bankrupt and the position was the same as if the bankruptcy had been annulled.

Lord Justice Luxmoore rejected this contention. He pointed out that under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, the effect of an annulment and of a discharge are not the same. Under section 29, where an adjudication is annulled, unless the court appoints to the contrary, the property of the debtor reverts to the debtor for all his estate or interest therein. There is an immediate reversion in the debtor. Under section 28 the effect of a discharge is to release the bankrupt from all debts provable in the bankruptcy, but there is no provision for reversioning the bankrupt's property in him. Under section 38 the property which vests in the trustee in bankruptcy is, "All such property as may belong to or be vested in the bankrupt at the commencement of the bankruptcy or may be acquired by or devolve upon him before his discharge."

In the present case, therefore, the annuity, which took effect on the testator's death, would, but for the forfeiture clause, have vested in the brother's trustee in bankruptcy, and could have been dealt with by the trustee. As between the trustee and the bankrupt the trustee's title was complete at the death. Before the trustee had reduced the annuity into possession, the bankrupt, however, could, under section 47, have disposed of the annuity for value to a third party. The learned judge accordingly held that the forfeiture clause had operated to transfer the annuity to the children of the bankrupt.

This decision makes it clear that in cases of this character, if the bankruptcy is annulled before any payment can in fact be made, nothing vests in the trustee in bankruptcy, and accordingly the clause does not operate. Where, however, before the annulment, moneys are available and payable to the bankrupt, these moneys vest in the trustee, and although the bankruptcy is subsequently annulled, the clause operates. It must also operate where there is a discharge. In this case, whether any moneys are payable or not, all the bankrupt's interest in the testator's death vests in the trustee and that interest is not divested by the discharge.—The Law Times.

ABSENCE OF COVENANTS FOR TITLE, &c.

The fear of the next purchaser is often before the eyes of a purchaser's adviser. He may be ready to pass over some right to which he is strictly entitled, but the next purchaser may not be so lenient, and it may be too late when the next purchaser has come on the scene.

For instance, suppose that A, when he buys from B has not taken any covenant for title from the latter, what will be A's position when he sells to C? In Re Scott and Alvarez's Contract (1895, 1 Ch. 596) it was argued on behalf of the purchaser that the inability of the vendor to give him a complete string of covenants for title was a reason why specific performance should not be forced upon him. To this Lord Justice Lindley replied: "There is a doubt and, in my opinion, a very considerable doubt, whether any reported decision can be found which says that a purchaser who can obtain the legal estate can get out of his purchase because he cannot get a good string of covenants." We know of no such decision, and unless one can be produced, the dictum of the Lord Justice, holds good (Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, 8th edition, p. 662). As the greater includes the less, this rule will include a case in which a vendor has conveyed "as trustee," when apparently he ought to have conveyed "as beneficial owner." A conveyance "as trustee" does not prove that he was a trustee, but merely that there is to be deemed to be included in the conveyance the appropriate covenant which a trustee would have given (Law of Property Act 1925, s. 76), and as the purchaser could not have successfully complained if there had been no covenant, still less can he do so when he has the benefit of a trustee's covenant, though it should have been a beneficial owner's.

Prima facie a purchaser has the right to production of title deeds not in the vendor's possession, and to an acknowledgment or the benefit of an acknowledgment, of that right. Sometimes, however, documents are outstanding in a third person's possession and an acknowledgment cannot be obtained. A vendor then falls back on the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 45, sub-s. (7), which provides that "the inability of a vendor to furnish a purchaser with an acknowledgment of his right to production and delivery of copies of documents of title or with a legal covenant to produce and furnish copies of documents of title shall not be an objection to title in case the purchaser will, on completion of the contract, have an equitable right to the production of such documents". What is meant by "inability"? It is obviously stronger than "difficulty," and if the vendor could obtain an acknowledgment from a person having possession of the documents, though he would have to pay his costs, he could not plead "inability": (see Wolstenholme and Cherry's Conveyancing Statutes, 12th edition; p. 306; Williams on Vendor and Purchaser, 4th edition, p. 701).

According to Dart (ante, p. 417): "Generally, every person who has an interest in the land has an equitable right to the production of all deeds which affirmatively prove his title, but not to those which do not." That is the rule in the case of litigation, where a party has been directed to make discovery to another party of the documents in his possession or power relating to any matter in question, and it appears to be a convenient rule on which to act in conveyancing.

In Re Jenkins' Contract (142 L. T. Jour. 240), the title deeds common to two properties were held by a firm of solicitors on behalf of all parties. One of the properties was sold, and the purchaser required that the title deeds should be handed over to him, but Mr. Justice Neville held that the purchasers' equitable right to the deeds was sufficient and that the contention failed.—The Law Times.

Extracts from Contemporaries.

Evacuation and Desertion.

A woman told the magistrate at the Tower Bridge Police Court that she, and her young baby had been evacuated to Worthing, but after three days, as she did not like it, she returned to London. Her husband now refused to allow her any money unless she returned to Worthing. She asked for advice.

The magistrate: "You had no business to return after you had been evacuated by the Government for your own safety. My advice to you is to obey your husband. No doubt he wants you and the baby to remain in a safe area."

A husband who takes this line in all sincerity, commits no matrimonial offence. He is not neglecting to maintain her and her infant child but making her maintenance conditional on her acceptance of conditions eminently reasonable at the present time and imposed for her own and her child's safety and comfort. Nor is there any desertion involved in coercing her, by means other than violent, into accepting the provision made for her and the child elsewhere.

The essence of desertion, as we have been frequently reminded lately, is the intention to terminate the marital relationship, and the existence or non-existence of this intent is a fact in each case which comes before the Courts. Should a husband take advantage of the situation in such a way as to indicate an intention to desert a wife innocently separated from him, he would be guilty of desertion, but where there is a temporary separation due to war conditions and manifestly in the true interests of the complaining spouse, it would be very difficult to establish a charge of desertion. There may, however, yet be some very knotty problems for justices to solve under the Summary Jurisdiction (Separation and Maintenance) Acts.—Justice of the Peace.

Limited Neutrality.

Exceedingly interesting questions of constitutional and international law combined are raised by the "neutrality" which was proposed for South Africa and is actually in effect for Eire. They offer occasion for large additions to the voluminous literature on the subject—after the war.

Meanwhile the sound way to take the matter is to realize that the British Commonwealth of Nations is less an empire than a league, and to be gratified at the great measure of unanimity with which its members go into the war, understanding its causes and its aims, and the necessity for sane communities to hold together in face of attempted domination of free peoples by force, backed by perfidy and effrontery unexampled in modern times.

"Neutrality" of any members of the British Commonwealth of Nations will, no doubt, be observed by the enemy just so long as it suits him to do so, but then that is true of the unqualified neutrality of independent peoples. The neutrality of Belgium was no obstacle to the Germans in 1914, the neutrality of Switzerland or Holland or any other small people will be no obstacle to the Nazis in 1939. It is not to be supposed that the small peoples are assuming the almost crushing burden of permanent mobilisation of their military forces for any reason other than fear of aggression from Germany. Whether a state is neutral or not seems now to be a question solely of fact—it used to be one of mixed fact and law—and the facts are too often beyond the control of the would-be neutral.—Justice of the Peace.

Dogs and Cats.

We heard recently from Manchester that a number of the city Council had put down a motion, inviting them to call for inclusion in the national register of dogs and cats, with a view to immediate extermination, except where kept for use on farms. The ostensible reason is danger to human beings, particularly children, of attacks by dogs, and disease caused by dogs and cats, and their consumption of food which human beings need.

While nearly all Englishmen like nearly all dogs, and some find cats quite likeable—at any rate their own—there is a dissentient minority, to whom (as to the fanatics in other fields) a war is an opportunity to express antipathy. We remember that the same sort of suggestion cropped up regularly in 1914–18, but even in the modified form of an increase in the price of dog licences, it was not adopted.

Some fall in the canine and feline population there must be, resulting from evacuation and the prohibition of taking pets into air raid shelters. Evacuation is reputed already to have been followed by a plague of mice in one suburban borough, and every student of Darwin knows how cats benefit red clover. Our four footed friends are valued companions, of the poorer family especially, and we do not see their enemies prevailing.—Justice of the Peace.

International Law.

We have had before us the report of the Fortieth Conference of the International Law Association at Amsterdam in 1938. It is almost painful reading in the light of present events.

Pitt, when Napoleon was having his will in Europe, is credited with crying out that the map of Europe should be rolled up. In the same way we are much tempted, in a time when so much is happening which is the negations of international law, to put such volumes as this on a high shelf as having very little relation to the hard realities of life as we are living in.

This is going too far, though it is not possible to coin a draft convention for the protection of civil populations without a wry smile, so soon after Nazi frightfulness has wreaked its cruelties upon Polish civilians, and when we are all carrying about gas masks because we know we cannot trust the pledged word of a great nation not to make gas attacks on civilians.

Neutrality, too, is another subject for sour reflection. In this shrunk world there can be no true neutrality. If the United States legislates in one form she favours one side, if in another she favours the other side. There are in fact all degrees of neutrality, but many of them are a sham. Russia, for instance, professes neutrality in the present war, but she completed the ruin of Poland, whether with the best intentions, as she professes, or not.—Justice of the Peace.

ALIENS AND ENEMY ALIENS

It would be interesting to trace out, even in outline, the history of our legislation about aliens from its start in 1905 to the present hour. Space forbids such a recital. Let us say that the 1905 Act made a start by prohibiting the landing of aliens from immigrant ships except at ports at which there was an immigration officer to give them leave. Mild powers of expulsion were given to the Secretary of State, but he was directed to support those whose expulsion he ordered until some ship belonging to the owner whose vessel had brought them came to one of our ports. Then the alien was handed to him with the Secretary of State's compliments and a bill for his keep—which we hope was always paid. All this, however, went by the board when the 1905 Act was repealed by an Order in Council made under the Aliens Act of 1914 and the amending measure of 1919. These were war and post-war measures and armed the Crown with drastic powers, to be exercised by Order in Council for registration, control and expulsion of aliens. The Principal Aliens Order (S. R. & O., 1920, No. 448), to which we have just referred, was made under the 1914 and 1919 Acts. It was amended by successive Orders made in 1923, 1925 and 1931. Lastly, on the eve of the outbreak of war, a fresh Order in Council (No. 994) was issued on the first of September. A humane provision in the Principal Order told the Stationery Office to re-print and re-issue it with the Amendments as soon as these were made. We sincerely congratulate that hard worked institution on the fact that inter horrentia Martis, they brought out the Principal Order amended with prompt efficiency.

It is in this Order that our readers will find all the administrative law about aliens. We imagine that those who will take more interest in them are the employers of governesses or servants who are of alien nationality. Some of them may be aliens from friendly countries, others of German nationality and therefore now enemy aliens. The Aliens Order, as amended up to date, deals with both and by successive regulations (Reg. 6, et seq.) says what must be done about them. Let us observe in passing that the vital provisions on this subject were recast in 1939. Even the most industrious text writers have not had time to place them in their books; so that reference to those books may possibly be misleading.

Now take the case of the French maid or Swiss nurse. She is no enemy alien but an alien she is. What is her obligation? If she is over 16 she must forthwith (here the new Order drops "as soon as may be" and uses the more peremptory word) furnish the local registration officer with a number of particulars. These will be found in the First Schedule to the Order and are twelve in number—name and sex, present address, nationality, date and country of birth, date and mode of arrival, address, last address abroad, and a number of others. It is well to notice that when the alien is giving these particulars the immigration officer has power to ask for anything else he thinks well, and that, as the Order stands, the alien must comply with his request. She must either produce a passport with photograph or some other document establishing her nationality, or explain why she cannot do so. Whenever anything (such as change of residence) occurs which makes her particulars inaccurate, she must report it to the local immigration officer within 48 hours. She may then be asked for a recent photograph and must give any particulars which he requires in order to keep his register accurate. She must send him word when and if she is going to change her residence and the place to which she is going, and must call on the local registration officer within 48 hours of her arrival and introduce herself to him. If she is away from home for 14 days, she must let the officer who functions at the place where she is located on the fifteenth day know of her whereabouts and let him know when she returns to her registered home.

The alien gets from the officer a registration certificate and must produce this whenever she does anything which makes inaccurate the record which it contains, so that he may, if necessary, note the change on that document—as he does in his register.

One must suppose that there are wandering aliens in England—such as gipsies or itinerant waiters and servants. Provision is made for them. They have to report to some immigration officer and the Order hopes that they may have some respectable English friend who will answer for them. If they have, certain provisions are made. But this is not a frequent case and we need not describe them.

Enemy Aliens

Now as to the enemy alien, the law is more strict. If over 16 years of age, he must give the particulars already mentioned as to be given by friendly aliens; and give the same information so as to keep the register accurate. But while free movement from place to place is allowed to friendly aliens, the enemy alien is forbidden to move unless the registration officer approves of the change in writing, and unless he is informed of his new whereabouts. The friendly alien is allowed to move about for two weeks before he says anything to a registration officer, but the enemy alien may only have that liberty for twenty-four hours. After that he must report daily to the local police unless the registration officer says that he need not do so. Moreover, he (the enemy alien) may not travel more than five miles from his registered residence without a "travel permit" from his registration officer. Wandering enemy aliens are treated more strictly than those who wander but are not enemies; for the provisions which allow non-enemies to find a respectable person to answer for them do not apply in their case.

These are the main provisions which affect employers of governesses and servants for whom we are to-day stating the law. They do not apply to aliens who touch our coast on ships and land—unless they land for discharge. Every alien must always be ready to produce to the police or an officer of the Forces or an immigration officer either his certificate or a passport with photograph. If he fails, he may lawfully be detained for inquiries.

Duties of Hotel-keepers

We may within the compass of a single article summarise the duties of hotel-keepers, though they are not immediately relevant to the purpose of to-day. In the word "hotel-keeper" we comprise everybody who provides lodgings or sleeping accommodation for reward. Every such person must always keep a register of his alien guests over 16, be they enemies or not. When a guest arrives, his name and nationality and date of arrival must be stated, and the hotel-keeper must enter the date of his departure. The Secretary of State may call on hotel-keepers to inform the local registration officer about his guests with any particulars which he (the S. of S.) prescribes. Every guest (alien or not) at a hotel must give his name and nationality but if he is an alien he must also give any particulars which the S. of S. may direct. Here the Order has been tightened up by giving the S. of S. power to ask for what he likes from time to time. The hotel-keeper's duty is to insist on the giving and signing of the statement of particulars and to keep the record for two years, during which the police can at any hour insist on seeing it. Lastly, there is a new provision which tells the ordinary householder what he is to do if he either knows or suspects that someone who is staying in his house is an alien. He must, so far as he can, satisfy himself that the person, if an alien, is obeying the law as to reporting and registration. If he cannot so satisfy himself, it becomes his duty to report the presence of the suspect to the immigration officer.

This new rule, which invokes the active help of the ordinary householder in detective work may cause some misgivings. It is apparently enough—to impose this duty on the householder—that there should be facts which would arouse suspicion in the mind of the ordinary reasonable man. If there is, and a particular householder either does not feel suspicious, or when he feels something like it, turns his mind to other subjects, then we think he might be convicted of breach of the Order.

Much litigation took place during and after the late war as to who is an alien and who is not. At one time it was thought that an alien enemy could not, according to our law, throw off his nationality in war-time; but after the war was over judicial heads cooled, and decisions were given to the effect that this might be done. These matters, however, must be left for discussion at some future time. It was enough to-day to state the law on a matter which we know is troubling the minds of many of our readers—and of their less fortunate friends.—The Law Journal.

RECITALS IN DEEDS

Drafting in emergency practice, perhaps more than in any other sphere, requires the closest contact with the viewpoint of the parties to the document, who often enough may personally need to resort to its contents to ascertain their own position in the ordinary course of business. Wherever unnecessary in such documents, it seems better to avoid not so much technical terms, as technical turns of phrase.

For some reason or other, the average layman appears to be obfuscated by recitals, and the preliminary "Whereas" arouses in him the attitude of mind which stigmatises all that follows as so much "legalese," if such an analogue to "journalese" may be said to exist. The old form of recital by way of preamble to a statute has become rooted in institutional life in the United States of America, working its way downwards to the vocabulary of the typical American citizen, while in this country it has become limited to Parliamentary enactment, and even there with decreasing frequency. Thus to warn off the layman there is nothing more effective than a preliminary "Whereas," be that the prelude to narrative or to introductory recitals. But for wartime documents, or any other documents, for that matter, of everyday use or recourse the layman should not be warned off, and thus a substitute for the recital becomes a paramount necessity.

Conveyancers have evolved a formula which effectively takes the place of recitals and in fact adds to the clarity and consecutiveness of a document. The formula was reached by an earlier effort to condense recitals by way of stating the effect of certain recited documents and circumstances, rather than by narrating them in terms of historical or logical order. Sir Howard Elphinstone, in his Introduction to Conveyancing in the first edition, dated as far back as 1871, referred to this method, observing (p. 85) that when "well done it gives rise to very concise and intelligible drafts." In the latest edition the author states that it is now adopted by most of the leading conveyancers where the state of the title admits of it (7th ed., p. 76). Prideaux in the current 23rd edition (p. 72) refers to the scheduling of documents and facts, the recitals referring to the contents of each schedule or each part of a schedule, stating shortly the result. The Encyclopaedia of Forms and Precedents (2nd edition), and the volume "Sale of Land" in the new 3rd edition, to which a cordial welcome may be extended, as well as the Cumulative Supplements, show many illustrations of the method. As an instance see Cumulative Supplement No. 12, pp. 1176-7: "Whereas under the instruments specified in the first schedule hereto the entirety of the hereditaments specified in the second schedule hereto is now vested in, etc."

This system does not dispense with, although it curtails the length of, recitals, and it retains that preamble nature which appears so forbidding to laymen. A method, however, has been devised whereby the narrative effect of recitals is secured without anything at all in the form of a preamble. A definition clause gives the meanings of compendious terms used in the draft, one schedule sets out a material clause in some governing document such as a will or settlement, while a second schedule sets out certain facts and events which require to be placed on record, and can be so headed.

Recitals in form are completely obviated, while the function of narrative recitals is performed by the second schedule without any preliminary heralding. The method is to be highly commended for such documents as may be frequently resorted to by laymen. The language of such a schedule can be colloquial rather than technical, so that he who runs may read. The sooner concessions to the phraseology of ordinary conversation in documents of an informal businesslike character are granted the quicker will such documents be readily acceptable to the layman, however much the terminology may go against the grain of the "pure conveyancer." The avoidance of recitals and their substitution by narrative and explanatory schedules are, however, the main points to be borne in mind.—The Law Journal.

Deodands.

No bad relaxation for the lawyer, when wearied by the daily round and common task of his professional calling, is to turn over some old legal treatise or statute book, which will be found to have many a quaint story to tell of customs and laws which long held sway but which have since been swept into the limbo of the past. Among these old laws or customs were those relating to what were called "deodands," which showed a wonderful vitality, subsisting as they did in full force till the middle of last century, when Parliament, persuaded of their inutility or folly, intervened and abolished them altogether, this legislation being inspired by Lord Campbell who described deodands as "the disgraceful remnant of superstition and barbarism."

What was a deodand?

The word "deodand" denoted something offered to God, and this because in early times the church or the poor had the ultimate benefit. In England, however, a thing became a deodand when the coroner's jury had duly found it to be the cause of death, which, however, must have happened within a year and a day of the casualty. To give some illustrations of deodands, and how they came to be so, we may turn to some of the old books, where we read that if a man in watering his horse is drowned, the horse is a deodand; so also if a man fall into the water and is carried under a mill wheel whereby he is killed, the wheel is forfeited, but not the mill. But it seems that if a person under the age of fourteen fell from a cart or horse, neither the horse nor the cart was a deodand because the youth was not of discretion to look to himself; if, however, a horse, bull, or the like killed him, or if a cart ran over him, the animal or the cart was a deodand and was forfeit to the king, who usually granted it to his almoner to distribute in charitable uses. In every indictment for murder or manslaughter the indictment had to allege what the instrument was that was used by the prisoner, and its value.

Railways and deodands.

In the early days of railway traction, accidents were not uncommon, and the companies soon felt this old law as to deodands anything but interesting, as it is to us nowadays, for if the accidents resulted in the death of passengers, the engine, or whatever it was that occasioned the casualty, was forfeit as a deodand. As late certainly as 1840 we read of an accident near Howden station of the Hull and Selby railway, caused by the accidental fall of a huge iron casting from one of the trucks five of the passengers being killed. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death, but laid a deodand of £500 on the engine and carriage. An incident such as this drew pointed attention to this old law and led to its abolition by the Act 9 & 10 Vict. c. 62 which provided that "from and after September 1, 1846, there shall be no forfeiture of any chattel for or in respect of same having moved to or caused the death of man; and no coroner's jury sworn to inquire upon the sight of any dead body, how the deceased came by his death, shall find any forfeiture of any chattel which may have moved, to or caused the death of the deceased or any deodand whatsoever and it shall not be necessary in any indictment or inquisition for homicide to allege the value of the instrument which caused the death of the deceased, or to allege that the same was of no value." In connection with this measure it is interesting to add that as the deodand went, at least nominally, to the Sovereign, the then Lord Chancellor stated in the course of the discussion that it was necessary to have the Queen's assent to the introduction of the Bill, and this in fact he had obtained.

A Gleam of humour.

On a subject so funereal as deodands, it might be thought that there was no room for anything in the nature of humour to enter; but the old circuit days contrived to lend a little jocularity to it by reference to the necessity in connection with deodands for finding the specific value of the thing which caused the death. Thus Lord Eldon used to recall an incident that happened at York while he attended the circuit there as a junior. As he told the story it was as follows: while Sir Thomas Davenport, a very dull orator, was making a long speech, a chimney-sweeper's boy, who had climbed up to a dangerous place in front of a high gallery, having been put to sleep by him, fell down, and was killed. Whereupon Eldon—still of course plain John Scott—being then Attorney-General of the circuit, indicted Sir Thomas in the grand court for the murder of the boy, and the indictment (according to the rule of law which required that the weapon should be described, and that there should be an averment of its value, or that it was of no value) alleged that the murder was committed with "a certain blunt instrument of no value, called a long speech."—The Law Times.

(a) under any rule made under section 2, or

(b) punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years,— triable by any Court having jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Special Tribunal, and may in any such order direct the transfer to the Special Tribunal or any particular case from any other Special Tribunal or any other Criminal Court not being a High Court.

10. Procedure of Special Tribunals.

(1) A Special Tribunal may take cognizance of offences without the accused being committed to it for trial.

(2) Save in cases of trials of offences punishable with death or transportation for life, it shall not be necessary in any trial for a Special Tribunal to take down the evidence at length in writing, but the Special Tribunal shall cause a memorandum of the substance of what each witness deposes to be taken down in the English language, and such memorandum shall be signed by a member of the Special Tribunal and shall form part of the record.

11. Exclusion of public from proceedings of Spécial Tribunals.

In addition, and without prejudice, to any powers which a Spécial Tribunal may possess by virtue of any law for the time being in force to order the exclusion of the public from any proceedings, if at any stage in the course of a trial of any person before a Spécial Tribunal application is made by the prosecution, on the ground that the publication of any evidence to be given or of any statement to be made in the course of the trial would be prejudicial to the safety of the State, that all or any portion of the public shall be excluded during any part of the hearing, the Spécial Tribunal may make an order to that effect, but the passing of sentence shall in any case take place in public.

12. Powers of Spécial Tribunals.

shall have a right of appeal to the High Court within whose jurisdiction the sentence has been passed, but save as aforesaid and notwithstanding the provisions of the Code, or of any other law for the time being in force, or of anything having the force of law by whatsoever authority made or done, there shall be no appeal from any order or sentence of a Spécial Tribunal, and no Court shall have authority to revise such order or sentence, or to transfer any case from a Spécial Tribunal, or to make any order under section 491 of the Code, or have any jurisdiction of any kind in respect of any proceedings of a Spécial Tribunal.

(3) The powers conferred upon the Provincial Government and the Governor-General by Chapter XXIX of the Code shall apply in respect of a person sentenced by a Spécial Tribunal.

APPEAL AFTER PLEA OF GUILTY.

A type of appeal which is by no means infrequent in practice is that of appeal against conviction where a plea of guilty has been entered. At Surrey Quarter Sessions, on 22nd September, the appellant, who had pleaded guilty to a charge of obtaining credit by fraud, appealed against his conviction (R. v. Neill). In his notice of appeal he stated that he was not guilty, the matter complained of was a civil debt only, and he did not understand until after sentence. He had admitted a number of similar offences, and the police had found pawn tickets and a watch on him. On 6th May, the appellant, giving the name of Fitzgerald, had visited O, and told her that he had been sent from the newspaper shop for lodgings. He untruthfully stated that he was working on a building in the district. On 12th May he told O: "I am sorry to disappoint you; the boss has gone to France to bury his sister and has not paid us." On 19th May he left without paying.

On being cautioned, he said: "I have been to see the lady since and have paid her. I owe one or two people money, but you can't pay if you are out of work and sleeping out."

On appeal, it was held that there may have been some doubt in the mind of the appellant as to what he was pleading to, and he was therefore permitted to proceed with his appeal against conviction. The appeal was, however, dismissed.

Normally criminal courts are unwilling to allow appeals against conviction to proceed where a plea of guilty has already been entered. There are cases, nevertheless, where appeals have been allowed to proceed and have actually been successful although a plea of guilty has been entered. Where a learned commissioner at the Central Criminal Court persuaded a prisoner to plead guilty to a charge of abduction, although the prisoner insisted that the girl whom he was alleged to have abducted said that she would rather drown herself than go home, the prisoner's appeal was allowed to proceed, and it succeeded. The learned commissioner was apparently under the erroneous impression that the offence consisted in preventing the girl's parents from knowing her whereabouts, and it was to this imaginary offence that the prisoner had pleaded guilty (R. v. Alexander, 107 L. T. 240).

A similar case occurred in R. v. Ingleson [1915] 1 K. B. 512. The appellant had pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with stealing horses and receiving them knowing them to have been stolen. When asked whether he had anything to say why the court should not pass sentence upon him, he handed up a written statement, containing the words: "I am guilty of taking the horses not knowing them to have been stolen." He was sentenced to four months' imprisonment with hard labour. In allowing the appeal, Lord Coleridge, J., said that the recorder could not have read to the end of the statement, and added: "It is most important that a prisoner should not be misled by the plea of guilty. He clearly thought he was guilty without having any felonious intent to steal. The absence of felonious intent is inconsistent with a plea of guilty, either to the stealing or receiving. In those circumstances it is quite clear that the plea of guilty was wrongly entered and all the proceedings consequent on that plea are bad. A plea of not guilty must be entered and the case must go back for rehearing."

The effect of such a direction, as is shown in R. v. Baker, 7 Cr. App. Rep. 217, is that there has been no proper plea of guilty. The form of order allowing the appeal, as recorded in that case, was: "The Court . . . doth allow the said appeal, and doth order that the conviction and judgment be set aside and annulled, and that the appellant do appear at the next session of the Central Criminal Court and plead to and answer the said indictment and that in the meantime, the appellant be remanded in custody." In other words, the whole proceedings are treated as a nullity, and a renire de novo is ordered (see Crane v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1921] 2 A. C. 299).

"It will require a very strong case and exceptional circumstances," said the court in R. v. Lucas, 1 Cr. App. Cas. 61, "to induce the court to give leave to re-open a case in which the prisoner has pleaded guilty." In R. v. Forde [1923] 2 K. B. 400, at p. 403, Avory, J., went into details: "A plea of guilty having been recorded, this court can only entertain an appeal against conviction if it appears (1) that the appellant did not appreciate the nature of the charge or did not intend to admit he was guilty of it, or (2) that upon the admitted facts he could not in law have been convicted of the offence charged." In Lucas's Case leave to appeal was refused when it was stated, on behalf of the applicant that he would not have pleaded guilty had he not been so upset at the trial. In Forde's Case it was submitted that the plea of guilty to a charge of indecent assault where carnal knowledge of a girl under sixteen years of age was charged in the same indictment was entered by mistake because, it was contended, the appellant was under twenty-three years of age and he had, in the circumstances, reasonable grounds for believing that the girl was of or above the age of sixteen years, within the proviso to s. 2 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1922. It was held that the proviso did not apply to a charge of indecent assault and the appeal was dismissed.

Where there is merely an appeal against sentence, there is nothing in a plea of guilty to prevent the appeal from proceeding. In appeals to quarter sessions this is expressly provided by s. 25 of the Criminal Justice Act, 1925. Further, it has been held, on the true construction of s. 4 (3) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, that where a person pleads guilty at his trial the Court of Criminal Appeal has power to quash the sentence passed upon him and substitute such sentence as they think proper (R. v. Ettridge [1909] 2 K. B. 24). In many cases there is more hope of success on an appeal against sentence where the prisoner has pleaded "guilty" than where the prisoner has pleaded "not guilty," for, as Channell, J., pointed out in R. v. Sneasby, 2 Cr. App. Rep. 178: "One is more reluctant to interfere where the judge has heard the whole case." In that case the sentence was substantially reduced on the ground that if the learned commissioner who tried the case had had all the facts before him he would probably not have passed the sentence he did.—The Solicitors' Journal.

CONSENT TO ASSAULT

In a recent police court case at Watford (R. v. Starkey, The Times, 16th August) the chairman of the magistrates made a statement of law which deserves careful examination. On summons for assault taken out by a wife against her husband, the wife asked for the summons to be withdrawn on the ground that she had forgiven the assault. She said: "I gave him sauce, and he will not have it. He hit me with a whip I forgive him for what he has done." The magistrate then asked her whether she had decided that she would not give him any sauce, and, on receiving her affirmative answer, he asked whether she was quite willing that he should thrash her if she did, and she again replied "Yes." The chairman then remarked: "It seems to me that you are arranging a new code outside our law here." The defendant said they had been married for nineteen years and he had only hit his wife twice during that time. On binding over the defendant for twelve months not to assault his wife with a whip or otherwise, the chairman said: "I want to make it quite clear that you cannot treat your wife as if she is a slave. Her statement that she is willing for you to thrash her if she answers you back will not work in a free country like this."

A consideration of the case of R. v. Donovan [1934] 2 K. B. 498 seems to show that the Watford magistrate's somewhat wide statement of the law on the subject of consent to assault needs some qualification. In that case the appellant was charged at quarter sessions with (a) indecent assault, and (b) common assault, on a girl of seventeen. The evidence was that he had beaten her with a cane, and the defence was that the girl had consented and that the onus was on the prosecution to prove lack of consent. He was found guilty and was sentenced to concurrent sentences of eighteen months' imprisonment for indecent assault and six months' imprisonment for common assault.

The court delivered a considered and unanimous judgment (read by Swift, J.), allowing the appeal. It was pointed out in the judgment that the beating was in circumstances of indecency, to gratify a form of sexual perversion to which the appellant was apparently addicted, and the medical evidence was that the beating was "fairly severe." There was independent evidence of a telephone conversation which showed that the prosecutrix submitted to going to the place where the beating took place, "with full knowledge of the appellant's intentions and without reluctance."

One of the grounds on which the appeal was allowed was that the chairman failed to direct the jury in accordance with the requirement laid down in R. v. May [1912] 3 K. B. 572, 575: "The court is of opinion that if the facts proved in evidence are such that the jury can reasonably find consent, there ought to be a direction by the judge on that question, both as to the onus of negating consent being on the prosecution and as to the evidence in the particular case bearing on the question."

With regard to the contention on behalf of the Crown that this was a case in which it was unnecessary for the prosecution to prove absence of consent, the judgment went on to state that the learned judges had considered the authorities and thought it of importance that they should state their opinion on the law applicable to the case. The law was that no one could license another to do an act which was in itself criminal. In such cases it was never necessary to prove absence of consent. "There are, however," continued the judgment, "many acts in themselves harmless and lawful which become unlawful only if they are done without the consent of the person affected. What is, in one case, an innocent act of familiarity or affection, may, in another, be an assault, for no other reason than that, in the one case there is consent, and in the other consent is absent. As a general rule, although it is a rule to which there are well-established exceptions, it is an unlawful act to beat another person with such a degree of violence that the infliction of bodily harm is a probable consequence, and when such an act is proved, consent is immaterial."

The court then referred to some of the well-established exceptions to the general rule that an act likely or intended to cause bodily harm is an unlawful act. Such are the exceptions of manly diversions such as foils or wrestling, where bodily harm is not the motive, and rough and undisciplined sport or play, where bodily harm is not the motive. The court held that the case did not come into either of those categories. The jury, however, should have been directed that they had first to be satisfied that the blows struck by the prisoner were likely or intended to do bodily harm to the prosecutrix. "For this purpose we think that 'bodily harm' has its ordinary meaning and includes any hurt or injury calculated to interfere with the health or comfort of the prosecutor. Such hurt or injury need not be permanent, but must, no doubt, be more than transient and trifling." The question as to the likelihood or intention of bodily harm was never left to the jury and therefore there had been misdirection.

An old writer once said that it was permitted to a husband to chastise his wife with a rod no thicker than a man's thumb, but such a view could not prevail in these days of sex equality, even if the chastisement could not cause bodily harm. Where, however, there is full consent by a penitent wife, and the circumstances of the case are such that there was no likelihood or intention of bodily harm, it is wrong to suggest that the law could interfere in what is an entirely domestic affair.—The Solicitors' Journal.

Extracts from Contemporaries.

Unusual Probation Condition

The obstinacy of the errant young is exasperating to their elders and often dangerous to themselves. In a case at Leamington a girl thief, who had, by excessive slimming, seriously undermined her health and indirectly, no doubt, her morale, was bound over with a condition that she should give up her inexpert treatment of herself. She broke this condition of her recognizance. When brought up, she was asked why she was so persistent in the habit. She replied that her body was her own property to do with as she liked. If it was against the law to take these tablets, why were they manufactured and sold?

The mayor said it would be in the girl's own interest that she should receive the training and attendance which six months' imprisonment would impose.

One pictures her in prison, getting comfortably plump in body and sensible in mind.—Justice of the Peace.

Fun Fairs

The complaint against the fun fair is that it offers thinly disguised gambling to youthful buyers of chances, who sometimes pay with other people's money, and at the best waste their own pennies. Well, there was gambling before ever a fun fair opened or an automatic machine was devised to take a penny. Did not Henry VIII prohibit "shove-groat" by a law passed in the interests of archery on the petition of the bow and arrow makers? We called it, by the way, "shove ha'penny" in the days of our own youth. The gambling instinct is simply ineradicable. If you leave men with nothing but their ten fingers they will use them as instruments of gaming. They actually do so in Italy when Signor Mussolini is not looking. Till we give the young some alternative, light and noisy, the opportunity to try, try again (which we always were taught was so estimable in Bruce's spider), and the chance of a prize, will continue to dazzle their fancy.—Justice of the Peace.

REVIEWS.

Broom's Legal Maxims. Tenth Edition.—By R. M. KRESLEY, M. A., LL. M. (OANTAB.), PUBLISHED BY SWEET & MAXWELL, LTD., 3, CHANCERY LANE, W. O. 2. PRICE £1, 12s. 6d. net.

The late Dr. Broom published the first edition of this book in 1845 and since then it was recognized as a masterly exposition of the principles upon which the English Common Law is based. The learned Editor of the present edition has followed the example set in by previous editions, by keeping the arrangement of the subject-matter, wherever possible, unchanged. Many new cases have been added and some transfers from one chapter to another have been made.

In the legal science, perhaps more frequently than in any other, reference must be made to first principles. Hence a knowledge of first principles is at least as essential in law as in other sciences. In the present work the learned author has not only pointed out the most important Legal Maxims but also explained and illustrated their meaning. He has shown the various exceptions to the rules which they enunciate. In this task the learned author has consulted various Reports and Treatises on the subject. The plan adopted, in presenting the subject before the reader, is both logical and natural. The book is useful not only for the use of students intending to practice at the Bar but also to the first-rank practicing lawyer, who may be desirous of applying a Legal Maxim to the case before him. We are sure that this work of Dr. Broom shall remain all the time a legal classic.

Laws of India or Civil Practice, Volume 1.—By MR. D. R. PREM, ADVOCATE, FEROZPORE CITY, PRINTED AT "LABOR ART PRESS." PRICE RS. 12 PER VOLUME.

The learned and well-known author of "Criminal Practice" has now brought out the first Volume of his new work Laws of India or Civil Practice, which has been cast on the same lines as his previous work. The work is to be completed in 5 or 6 Volumes. The work, which is styled by Sir B. L. Mitter, Advocate-General of India as magnum opus is an exhaustive encyclopædia of Civil Case-law. The alphabetical arrangement will be found most useful by the busy Practitioners and Judges and will save a lot of their time in finding out the law point required. The work is a valuable addition to the law publications. We hope that the work will be warmly received by the Bench and the Bar alike. The printing and get-up are good.

CHARACTER TRAINING CENTRES

The following speech was delivered by the Hon'ble Sir Douglas Young, Chief Justice of the Lahore High Court at the garden party given by the citizens of Ludhiana:—

About eight years ago at Allahabad I first realized the necessity of trying to do something for Indian boys, especially for those of the poorer classes. I was attending the Finals of a Football competition. At half-time some two or three hundred small boys from the city of Allahabad rushed on to the field trying, during the interval, to get one kick at the football. This was the only opportunity which these small boys had to indulge in the very proper and natural propensity of a boy for ball games. Except to some extent in the schools and colleges of India, little or nothing is done to amuse, and through amusement to educate the boys of India. In addition, even in the schools and in their homes, education in discipline and self-control is lacking, with the inevitable result that the lack of discipline and control is damaging to the State. An excess of crime is largely due to this fact. We get in this country astonishing examples of undisciplined conduct, not only in schools and colleges but occasionally even in the learned profession of law. Lack of discipline is as harmful in the educated as in villagers.

Since I have been in the Punjab I have had an opportunity to try and do something to remedy this condition of affairs, and I must say I have been considerably encouraged by the interest which thinking and public-spirited people are taking in this subject. Much more, however, requires to be done. In my opinion nothing can be more important to the future of India than that public opinion should be mobilized in the endeavour to give the boys of India what might properly be termed 'character training'. We have now completed in Lahore an institution for this purpose. We have combined training in the laws and practices of scouting with the best and most modern form of physical education together with instruction in the teaching of all kinds of sports and games. The year's course which we are giving to graduates turns out, in my opinion, the most useful type of educated and trained men. Every person who has seen what our new College can do in this way has been in agreement with me as regards the necessity of spreading throughout the Punjab what we teach in our College. We have now got a central institution where the curriculum contains all that is necessary to improve India in these essential matters. About a year ago I discussed this matter with Mr. Hervey, the Principal of the Government College in this place. He is, I need hardly say, an enthusiastic supporter of the scheme. The District authorities, too, realize the importance of providing in Ludhiana a centre where the interests of the boys of Ludhiana may be looked after. Land has been promised, a Club House has been planned which will house not only the headquarters of scouting, athletics, physical education and Red Cross work, but where the boys of Ludhiana can get the sports and games they need for amusement and health, physical education, and the character training which scouting provides, in all a complete course both for the body and the character of your boys. I have been only too delighted to come to Ludhiana to assist in the campaign to obtain for this city this very necessary institution. Rs. 20,000 is required for the building, a tube-well and other necessities. I am not here to take money out of Ludhiana. The money that is collected here will stay here and will be of permanent and enduring benefit to your town. If you have such an institution in Ludhiana you will be the happier for it.

My ambition is to see such an institution in every town of the Punjab and in charge of it. I would like to see one of our trained graduates from the College of Physical Education and Scouting at Lahore. I estimate that Rs. 50,000 will provide in each town such an institution with a trained man in charge of it. Surely this is not an impossible ideal. When each town has its own local institution, then it would be possible to have similar smaller branches in the villages. I would like to see Government also give a grant to every such local institution. Rs. 1,000 a year would, I think, provide and maintain all the necessary equipment. Half a lac or one lac a year—even in these days of enormous expenditure in Hissar—might—I think—be provided in grants. Any expenditure on this project, I am certain, would produce large dividends. Crime necessarily would decrease and with it the enormous expenditure on crime. There would be more unity and co-operation in India. The energies of Indians would not be wasted in futile displays of indiscipline. We at Lahore would be responsible for organization and, if we are dealing with 50 or even 100 such branch institutions, we could make arrangements to buy at very cheap rates all the necessities for games and sporting activities generally which we could distribute to the branches. We are also there to assist by expert advice and for inspection purposes to keep the standard of training of the highest and most modern level.

I would like the district authorities everywhere to consider this proposition and, if any district authorities or any association of public-minded citizens anywhere require my assistance, I would only be too glad to be at their disposal during the short time which remains to me in this country. My ambition is to see in the Punjab before I leave India a complete organized scheme for character-building and training in healthy sports, physical education, discipline and self-control. I know the personal opinion on this matter of His Excellency the Governor, the Premier and the other Ministers of Government. With the assistance primarily of public-minded people in each locality and with some small assistance from Government, I see no reason why the scheme should not be in operation in the Punjab within a year or two. Ludhiana has the chance of being the pioneer in the mofussil, and I will be gravely disappointed if the citizens of Ludhiana do not seize such a great opportunity.

Extracts from Contemporaries.

Don't and Do

The problem of the evacuated children is, in Browning's alliterative phrase, "multi-form, manifold and menacing." It is very much on the mind of those of us who have been concerned with the work of juvenile courts. "We make no excuse for returning to it here.

We have flattered ourselves that we really have of late years got to know something about the causes of juvenile delinquency. Certainly no one with any sense has failed to recognise that they are multiple and complicated, but we are sure that one very potent factor is merely the ordinary human craving to escape from boredom. "What shall we do now?" is the everlasting cry of the healthy playing child.

"Go and see what baby's doing and tell him not to do it," may be a pardonable utterance for a harassed mother. As a social policy for the young it falls short. "Don't" and "Do" stand for two sharply contrasted methods. It would be foolish to think that we can manage entirely without prohibitions, but the emphasis ought to be on encouragement, and not on nega-tion. The men who built up the boy scout movement have done more to check juvenile wrong-doing than all the framers of the criminal law from Moses to the present day.

A few weeks before the war some justices and others interested in juvenile delinquency met for a talk. The word "delinquency," by the way, is really worth noticing. We are no longer so ready to stigmatise youthful lapses as "crime," as people were in the days when they sometimes hanged for thieving, small boys who could not, for their weeping, see where to set their feet on the scaffold. Many things came up for discussion, but mainly the talk was about fun fairs and open counter shops and then community centres. —J. P.

Prize Courts.

The announcement that letters patent have been issued for the establishment of a Prize Court is a reminder that even in war time, when ships and cargo may have been captured by one of the belligerents, the question whether the seizure was or was not lawful is to be determined by a judicial tribunal which we know as a Prize Court. The jurisdiction of this Court, which is exercised by the Admiralty judges, with an appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, is based upon international law, unless, in so far as Great Britain is concerned, that has been otherwise affected by statute. During the Great War, the Prize Court was kept fully occupied in the discussion and decision of a multitude of interesting questions arising out of the seizure of alleged contraband of war, among the many points laid down being that a cargo of petroleum owned by a German company shipped at a neutral port on board a British vessel was not immune from condemnation by reason of having been shipped in a British vessel before the outbreak of war. In another case it was held that although a subject of a belligerent State can acquire a commercial domicile in a neutral State which will protect his goods from condemnation, residence in the neutral State is an essential condition of such domicile. Consequently, where none of the German partners in a firm carrying on business in Buenos Aires, whose goods were shipped in a British vessel before the outbreak of war, were resident in the Argentine Republic at the time of seizure, the goods must be regarded as enemy property and subject to condemnation.—S. J.

Scraps of Paper.

It has been wisely said that treaties are for the most part not international law, but contracts between States, the interpretation and application of which are governed by international law.

Hitler, furor teutonicus, and Stalin, the red czar, are treating the repudiation of contracts according to the will of one party of them, as ordinary international procedure. It is by them asserted to be justifiable on such grounds as the necessity of the stronger party as seen by himself (Hitler's Lebensraum doctrine), the temporary disablement of the weaker party in a war, not with the other party to the treaty-contract, but with another aggressor (Stalin's ground of justification for the Russian entry into Poland).

This is the doctrine of rebas sic stantibus carried to crazy point. It makes the plighted word of national representatives idle breath and their signature a mere dastardly spurt of the pen. Treaties, especially non-aggression pacts, become scraps of paper. What these over-clever bullies overlook are the difficulties which even such high-mightinesses get into when nobody can believe a word they say, and others fight on in determination or desperation. When they themselves would fain make peace.

The liar manifest, though he has power to make the skies fall, cannot compel belief.—J. P.

Discipline and Character.

Relationship between discipline, character and crime is obvious. For character-building, training in discipline is essential. Our leaders, many a time fail to control a mob whom they address. Result is riots. Even amongst students, college students not excepting, we get the same picture, though not with the same consequences. What the Indian youth to-day lacks is discipline in mind, body and deed. Actions must be subordinated to our better judgments, called by some "conscience". Child must be taught to distinguish wrong from right. His actions must be watched—in short, he must be trained. Like soldiers in the field, his action must respond to his superior will force. This is what we call character. Here is a field then for our leaders. It is one of the ambitions of Hon. Sir D. Young, the Chief Justice of the Punjab, to inculcate this spirit in the youths of the Province. In his career as the Chief Justice, he has never lost an opportunity to "serve the youths"—be it in public functions or on the Bench.

We respectfully agree with him when he said* the other day at a garden party given in his honour by the citizens of Ludhiana, "even in the schools and in their homes education in discipline and self-control is lacking, with the inevitable result that the lack of discipline and control is damaging to the State. An excess of crime is largely due to this fact. We get in this country astonishing examples of undisciplined conduct not only in schools and colleges, but occasionally even in the learned profession of law. Lack of discipline is harmful in the educated as in villagers". His plea for institutions for "character-training" is timely. There is already one college specially started with this aim in view, in Lahore, at his instance and effort. That shall be a standing monument to his zeal towards the Youths of India. The money spent over such institutions, is sure to produce large dividends. Crime would decrease and with it the enormous expenditure on crime. There would be more unity and co-operation, and canker of communalism will slowly subside.

We only wish, his cry is not a cry in wilderness. What we want, is greater number of such public spirited men giving such silent services to the cause of Indian nationhood.

The Poor Woman's Dog

One of the many surprising things discovered in the courts, as elsewhere, is what will move people to tears. The world is full of woes, and, to save us all going mad with horror, they are largely ignored, but if you want to see men made properly soft and their purse-strings loosed tell them of the widow and her dog, her only friend in a harsh world, with whom she must part because she cannot afford a license. She can do, in fact, better without a license, if only a reporter with a need for a bit of copy happens to be in court when her case comes on and the sub-editor wants something to fill a corner.

We remember one such case many years ago of a poor widow and her canine friend. She quite genuinely could not afford a license, but both she and her dog looked in good condition. She was not fined, but merely told she must comply with the law. Within twenty-four hours a dozen licenses had been taken out in her name, and rich people were sending hot-foot to the police court to enquire into the sad case; the ladies came in person, the men sent their valets or their butlers. Within a week over a hundred pounds had arrived in small sums, and they dabbled in for months, as the provincial press belatedly copied the pathetic paragraph. No longer was the widow's cupboard bare or the poor dog without a bone. Both of them had a real good time for quite a long time.

Even with the present plethora of horrors from the Far East to the Baltic and on all the seven seas, the dog without a license can find a corner in an evening paper. This time it is a poor invalid boy who needs four-footed companionship and a kindly poor woman who gives it him without paying toll to the public purse. But is she in trouble? She is not. She thought the animal had to be destroyed because she could not pay the fine of twelve shillings and sixpence. The dog's death was not demanded, as, of course, that would not have wiped out the fine, but that does not matter.

"Many people have communicated with this office, offering to pay the fine and the license as well." Thus runs the legend beneath the picture in an evening paper, of a careworn woman's face and the dear, sweet doggie held up in her arms, probably wondering what it is all about.—J. P.

Road accidents and the black-out.

The nature of the road casualty problem under black-out conditions emerges more clearly as further experience is gained. Figures for October record a total of 919 deaths, compared with 1,130 for the previous month and 641 for the corresponding month last year. For the first time the return of the Ministry of Transport shows the number of fatal accidents which occurred during the hours of darkness. The total for last month amounted to 564. Of the 572 pedestrians killed during the month, no less than 424 were killed in the dark. Only three of these were under fifteen years of age. On the other hand, it was stated at a recent Press conference arranged by the National "Safety First" Association that about one-third of those killed on the roads since the beginning of the war were over seventy years of age, one-third were between sixty and seventy, and one-sixth were between fifty and sixty, only one sixth being under fifty. It was accordingly suggested that, if elderly people were to refrain from going out in the dark except when absolutely necessary, the number of accidents would be greatly reduced. According to Mr. Howard Hodges, acting General Secretary of the Association, it has been found that a great percentage of street accidents have been caused by pedestrians stepping into the path of a car in the belief that the driver could see them. The pedestrian, he said, had not been able to rid himself of his peace-time road psychology and subconsciously thought he could be seen. The correctness of this diagnosis would appear to be confirmed by the higher incidence of accidents among the middle-aged and elderly, among whom habits, once formed, are perhaps less easily eradicated. But it also suggests that no great improvement in the situation is likely to be effected by a more rigorous enforcement of the law. Proposals put forward by the Association to the Ministry of Transport and the Ministry of Home Security include the modification of lighting restrictions and the employment of air-raid wardens to supplement the work of the police in giving warnings and advice to road users.—S. PUNCH AND THE POLICE

In a Christmas Number we may be allowed to forget the war for the length of one article, and to touch the lighter side of things. "All round the house is the Jet Black Night," as Cissie Loftus used to sing long ago in Peter Pan, but this side of the black-out curtains it is still permitted to us to be merry (if we are young enough) or to read an ancient volume of Punch in bed (if we are old enough) and chuckle at the odd ways of our grandfathers and the even odder ways of our grandmothers.

It need not hurt our feelings to realize that they would have at least as much right to laugh at us, did we not happen to have the accidental advantage (a fleeting one) of coming last. Perhaps in the paper limbos where they lie transfixed by the pencil of Leech or Du Maurier they actually do, when the volume is shut as tightly as our windows, grin coarsely, or open wide pre-Raphaelite eyes, at our queer or scandalous ways, our strange war for instance with its fighting men turned into mischievous birds and fishes beside whom the Roc and Leviathan might be regarded as drawing-room pets. The demure young ladies with croquet mallets or spoon tennis rackets would be frightfully shocked, not without a touch of envy, at land girls in breeches and auxiliary fire-women in slacks. Someone ought to develop a new-style grangerized book. Punch of the Crimean war days, interleaved with Punch of the days of the War-to-end-war would be a pleasant gift for troops in billets.

Punch, the incorrigible rogue of the marionette world, and Punch the London Charivari, are among the most pleasant of our acquaintances. How many general-knowledgers, by the way, could place the subtitle of our humorous weekly, or know that "charivari" is "a serenade of rough music, made with kettles, pans, tea-trays, etc., used in France, in derision of incongruous marriages, etc?" So says the Oxford Dictionary. There is virtue in that "etc." In the Middle West it used to be a well rosined plank drawn across an empty barrel, rough music fff as enjoyed by the inhabitants of Medicine Bow in Owen Wister's The Virginian. We confess that until we opened the O.E.D. we thought Charivari was the title of a dead and gone Paris comic paper of the days when Frenchmen copied their emperor by wearing a sort of hairy comma on the chin.

Anyway Codlin's our friend, and we have no quarrel with Short. The writer of this article ran after any old Punch and Judy man in the days when nice little boys had to wear sailor suits with a silly sort of inside bib which they liked about as much as Toby did the paper frill round his neck. Toby was often a weary and disdainful little dog, taking his part without zest and barking flat to mark his boredom.

Punch the puppet never showed proper respect for the police. When, as in most versions of the play, the constable comes with a warrant to arrest him for the murder of Scaramouch, Punch defiantly says, "What's that to you? If you stay here much longer I'll serve you the same."

Constable: "Don't tell me! You have committed murder, and I've a warrant for you."

Punch: "And I've a warrant for you," thereupon knocking down the constable and dancing and signing with conscious unconcern.

When an officer in a cocked hat follows, a sort of French gendarme fellow, this time with a charge of murdering wife and child, and "I'm come to take you up," Punch retorts, "And I'm come to take you down"—and effectually does so. Jack Ketch, the hangman, has no better luck:

he is tricked into his own halter and hanged on his own portable gallows.

In some versions (characters pop in and out of the play according to the taste and fancy of the showman) the Lord Chief Justice of England then comes to arrest him with his own hands, which, as supreme coroner and a justice of the peace for everywhere in England and Wales, he is presumably entitled to do, though the outcome shows that he had much better have relied on the posse. The dialogue is undignified on the Lord Chief Justice's side and disrespectful on the culprit's.

Chief Justice : "Hullo, Punch, my boy !

Chief Justice : "Don't you know me ? I'm the Lord Chief Justice."

Punch : "I don't care if you're the Lord Chancellor. You shan't get me into Chancery, that's all."

Chief Justice : "But I shall get you into prison. You're a murderer, and you've killed I don't know how many people."

Punch : "If you don't know, you'd better go and learn."

Chief Justice : "That won't do, my fine fellow. You're a murderer, and you must come and be hanged."

Punch : "I'll be hanged if I do"; knocks down the Chief Justice and dances and sings.

The scoffing hunchback began to publish his observations on life in 1841. Eighty-odd volumes of his works, named as is proper after himself, Punch, stand on the book-shelves behind the writer. After volume seventy-nine there is a great gap which he had every intention of filling, before the income-tax rose to its present impressive figure. Punch was excited in 1852 about an income tax of seven pence. The doleful prophecy was that The Income-Tax Never Dies. How true ! How very true !

From volume seventy-nine the work jumps to volume one hundred-and-forty-eight and its immediate successors, featuring the world war. We have lost the page, and the index will not help us to find the picture of the special constable whose wife is reassuring a frightened maid by pointing to the master going out to keep off the Zeppelins, so we can only hope we have got it right. If not, there is sure to be some reader who can correct us. A gentle skit on the super-zealous constable

Rural constable : "Sketching the harbour is forbidden, Sir."

Artist : "Oh that's all right. I'm making a study of clouds."

R. C. (impressively) : "Ah, but supposin' your picture got into the hands of the enemy's aircraft department, see the use they could make of it !"

The first prize in this group of volumes ought to be given, however, to the backed chestnut man being cautioned by a "somewhat talkative policeman": "You ain't 'arf got a muzzel velocity." Turn to page 154 of volume one-hundred-and-forty-eight and have a look at the policeman. He's the real thing.

But let us go back again to the comfortable days when islands were islands, comfortably ensconced behind a two-power-standard navy, or still earlier times when all wars were carried on a long way off in places like India or the Crimea. Punch began his literary career by announcing that he would, "from week to week, offer to the world all the fun to be found in his own and the following heads," one head being "Police." "This portion of the work is under the direction of an experienced nobleman, a regular attendant at the various offices." The "offices" were the police offices of Bow Street and other metropolitan centres, now "police courts," and some day we hope to be known as "magistrates' courts," as more exactly descriptive of their true status and function.

The earliest mention of the police in Punch is the "New police", that is Sir Robert Peel's force, after him called "bobbies" and "peelers." But the former term is said to have been in use before the setting up of the metropolitan police. "Bobby the beadle" was the guardian of a public square or other open space. "Peeler" was first applied to the Royal Irish Constabulary, another creation of Sir Robert's. He was Secretary for Ireland from 1812 to 1818.

By the 1850's the police had become "coppers" or "cops" which seems to show they were catching thieves and other law-breakers, which was more than the old "Charlies," as the watchmen were called, had been able to do.

Of course Punch does not forget the policeman's supposed predilection for female domestic servants, especially cooks. The very first picture of a policeman we have come across, if we except the "funny dog" with top-hat and truncheon which with other funny dogs makes the tail-piece to the Introduction to volume One, is a constable bending at the knees to kiss a housemaid through the area railings. He, too, has the tall hat and tail coat of the period, a costume due, we believe, to the desire to make the new police as much unlike soldiers as possible. Our ancestors of that period had, from an exaggerated fear of military tyranny, for many years endured unsafe streets and robbery with violence. In the light of after history the contemporary doubts and hesitations are amusing. The public was more given to apprehension than the police.

Punch of the forties made merciless fun of one Sir Peter Laurie, an alderman of the City of London. "The general conduct of the police," he is reported as saying, "was, he believed, good; but the instances of arbitrary conduct and overbearing demeanour set to flight all the ancient examples brought forward to enrich by contrast the serious parts of the glorious genius of Shakespeare."

The first mention of Bow Street we have found occurs in the issue of the ninth of November, 1841, where in a delightfully comic skit on police court proceedings, it is mentioned as "that den of thieves and magistrates." The wrong, and perfectly innocent, man is bounced into the dock and out again, convicted and fined, judicially scolded and pushed out of court, in a glorious fog of misunderstanding due to the speedy methods of gaolers and magistrates, which are still a feature of many courts of summary jurisdiction.

With the end of the first volume we part with regret from the rear view of a fat man on the outside page of each number, being robbed by a little cockney rickshack with a monkeylike face, one of Fagin's early successes no doubt.

We get some items of police history that probably even a lengthy search of Home Office files would not disclose. We discover for instance that the first police order for the medical examination of persons charged with drunkenness was issued in 1842. All persons who may be brought to stations insensible are to be examined at seven and six pence for each, a fee which it is suggested might induce young practitioners to "make as many people as possible drunk". Why does the facetiousness of other days leave us so cold? There is a good deal of this rather watery humour to put up with in the earlier volumes. Our full-blooded great-grand-parents were easily satisfied in some ways. Listen to the effort: "Why are policemen like the dogs of man? Because they are numbered." Ha! Ha! or perhaps only Ho! Ho!

A little later we are to infer that the Metropolitan Police Commissioner had ordered a discard of whiskers. "If we are to be disfigured," say some of them, "let the figures be taken from our collars, but let not the disfiguring process be put in practice upon our visages." Well, well, it is a poor heart that never rejoices.

In 1843 our wonderful police, as American lady visitors are so often reported as calling them, were already acquiring a reputation for courtesy. "Punch, in his too frequent collisions with the police has frequently remarked the growing politeness, the humane and gentle courtesies to be found among that body; a day or two since he discovered the cause of this. Mr. Higginbottom of Flayem House, Buxton, was regretting to a friend and late school-master, the dearth of classical assistants—the paucity of ushers, who, at thirty pounds per annum, were wont to teach Greek, Latin, mathematics, etc. 'Why,' said his friend, 'there was no want of such people in my time! No ushers to be had! How do you account for it?' 'My dear friend,' said Higginbottom, 'they're all gone into the new police.'" What a long shadow the police college did, as a coming event, cast before it!

But we must not linger too long in those ancient days when there were no warbling notes save those of the nightingales, when no elephants' children climbed wire ropes into the sky. But we cannot omit the really bitter gibe in a Punch effort of 1848, entitled "The Model Policeman": "He has a vivid recollection of what another policeman remembers." Well, it must be confessed that it is like that sometimes.

All this of course was before the writer and most of his readers were born, but there is still living an ex-metropolitan magistrate who was alive when Punch said the unkind words last quoted.

In a nearer day Tenniel had an effective cartoon in Punch based on the amazing revelations which preceded the trial of the detectives in November, 1877. John Bull is depicted turning a bull's-eye lantern on a policeman in uniform and helmet, with side whiskers and moustache complete. In the background is a note;

"Scotland Yard," and a door labelled "Detective Department." The legend underneath is: "Mr. Bull (takes policeman's lantern). Thank you, I'll just have a look round myself. Strikes me the premises ain't as clean as they might be." The really comforting part of that affair was that a policeman did the cleaning up himself, with great courage and efficiency.

Let us end on a pleasant note. Punch of the 22nd November in this year of grace and peril, has a policeman in his steel helmet marshalling a string of schoolgirls across the street. He has that ineffably determined sideface characteristic of the policeman on traffic duty. A fat gentleman, gas mask on haunch, takes his wife's arm. "Come along then, Gertrude. If you want to cross the road we'd better join the convoy." Of course this joke is not on the constable, but we have turned so many pages, of so many volumes looking for policemen that whenever we spot one to us he is the centre of the picture.

We conclude by saying that though we never fail to enjoy Punch's badinage or even sharp criticism of the police, the immense majority of the policemen we have known—and what an army that is—were good fellows quietly doing a useful job of work.—J. P.

Passports

Nobody, we believe, has a legal right to a passport at all. The grant of a passport is an act of courtesy by the Sovereign to assist his trusty and well-beloved subjects to go about the world armed with a request that they be well treated. But it is obvious that anyone who requires a passport must make a true declaration at the passport office, and must make no false pretence as to the intention which he has with regard to its use. The case of R. v. Brailsford and another (1905, 2 K. B. 731) is the leading authority on this point. If a person obtains a passport on the representation that he himself wishes to use it and then hands it to another, he is guilty of a public mischief and may be tried and convicted on a common law indictment. This week a magistrate in the Metropolis had before him a case in the same field as Brailsford's case. The charge was of making an untrue statement in order to obtain a British passport for a German-born woman. Of course, if she was married to the defendant she was a British subject: but on this point the report (Times, September 30) is not clear. Assuming that the German lady was in that position, we still cannot look without grave suspicion at a defendant who forges the name of a sponsor to sign the necessary photograph. The law on the matter, though not laid down by statute, is clear enough, and the learned Magistrate did well to impose a substantial sentence.—L. J.

Unconscious Libel.

Of course, a plaintiff in a libel action

must satisfy the jury that the words of which he complains would be taken by reasonable people to refer to him. The Judge has to rule whether they are reasonably capable of being so taken and then the jury, after hearing all the evidence, give their verdict as to whether they would or would not be so taken. In a recent case which has just been before the Court of Appeal (November 21, 1939) the learned Judge had left the proper question to the jury and they could not agree upon it. It was an extraordinary case. A newspaper had said with perfect truth of a certain Harold Newstead of Camberwell that he was a bigamist. But there happened to be another person in Camberwell called Harold Cecil Newstead of whom the words were utterly false. The jury were not able to make up their minds as to whether the words would be reasonably taken to refer to the plaintiff, though they found on some other issues apparently in the defendant's favour. The Judge below thought that unless they were agreed on the first and vital question, no judgment could be entered. The defendants challenged this decision and Lord Justice MacKinnon was for allowing the appeal; but the other two Lords Justices agreed with the Judge below. Ever since Hulton v. Jones (1910, A.C. 20) we have known that A. can libel B. though he does not know B's existence. Now we see that it is no defence for A to say that there is some other B. of whom all that he says is true. Some time soon we hope to deal more at length with the matter.—L. J.

CATTLE ON THE HIGHWAY.

Habits of thought engendered by professional activities are apt, perhaps unfortunately, to assert themselves in conditions of every-day life, and it may well have occurred to practitioners driving in a motor car along the highway to speculate when passing a herd of cattle upon the legal position which would result from one of the animals suddenly running across the road and occasioning injury to the car or its occupants. The problem is by no means a simple one. Such a case was recently heard at the East Retford county court, and the judge's decision was ultimately reversed by the Court of Appeal. The question turned upon the nature and extent of the duty which, in the circumstances, lay upon the owner of the cattle to control them. Before considering this case in further detail, it will be convenient to review certain of the earlier authorities.

First it may be desirable to draw attention to the following statement made by Mr. Justice Neville in the course of a judgment delivered in the Court of Appeal in Heath's Garage, Limited v. Hodges (115 L. T. Rep. 129; (1916) 2 K. B. 370). "In my opinion," the learned Judge said, "the experience of centuries has shown that the presence of domestic animals upon the highway is not inconsistent with the reasonable safety of the public using the road. I am unable to draw any distinction in this regard between domestic animals. I think horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, fowls and dogs all fall into the same category for this purpose. There is no doubt that the advent of motor cars has greatly increased the danger resulting from the presence of loose animals on the road owing to the speed at which the cars travel and the difficulty shared by man and beast in avoiding them. It was only yesterday, however, that, as mechanically propelled carriages, the right of motor cars to use the roads was subject to conditions which rendered great speed unattainable, and I think that to-day those who use them must take the roads as they find them and put up themselves with such risk as the speed of their cars occasions not only to themselves but to others. The prima facie harmlessness of domestic animals as frequenters of the highway is, I think, established as a legal doctrine."

But whatever the extent of the right of depasturing animals on the road may be, it is clear, that in order to succeed, a plaintiff must prove that the injuries sustained are a natural result of the alleged breach of duty and are not due to some extraneous element beyond the reasonable contemplation of the defendant. This point may be illustrated in Hadwell v. Rightson (97 L. T. Rep. 133; (1907) 2 K. B. 345) where the plaintiff claimed damages in respect of injuries sustained while riding a bicycle on a highway. Fowls, belonging to the defendant, on the footpath were frightened by a dog belonging to a third party, and one of them flew into the spokes of the plaintiff's machine. A divisional court dismissed an appeal from a county court which had found in favour of the defendant. Even if the fowl was not lawfully on the highway, the circumstances in which the accident happened, it was held, prevented the damage from being the natural consequence of its presence there (see Cox v. Burbidge (13 C. B. (N. S.) 430).

In the case under review, the county court judge had assumed that the fowls were unlawfully upon the highway as they were not using it for the mere purpose of passage either in the company of their owner or without him. Even so, Mr. Justice Phillimore observed, there was no antecedent probability that the fowl would be frightened by a dog, still less was there any probability that, if so frightened, it would fly into the spokes of a bicycle. The owner was not bound to contemplate such a result, as likely to flow from his letting the fowls be at large upon the road. The fowl would have done no harm but for the wrongful act of the animal of a third person. In such a case causa proxima non remota spectatur.

The learned judge intimated, however, that in his view too narrow a limitation had been placed upon the use to which a highway might lawfully be put. "It was said," the judgment continued, "that the rights of members of the public in a highway were confined to passing and re-passing, and that animals, except when accompanied by their owners, had no right to be on the highway at all. In the first place, I think that members of the public, in addition to using it eundo et redeundo, are also entitled to use it morando for a short time. And I doubt whether, even with that addition, the lawful uses are thereby exhausted. For instance, if fowls are kept near a highway, and there is corn stubble belonging to their owner on the other side of the road to which they might naturally and properly go, I am not prepared to say that to allow them to go there by themselves would be an unlawful use of the highway by their owner simply because they might while so doing run or fly into someone who was riding a bicycle.

Mr. Justice Bray observed that the plaintiff's case could only rest on negligence, and said: "In the absence of anticipated danger, there is no room for the suggestion of negligence."

It appears to be established that an owner or occupier of land who is entitled to pasture, to place horses, cattle, sheep, fowls, or another tame animal in a field, is not responsible if, by reason of the absence of hedges, those animals get on the highway. In Deen v. Davies (153 L. T. Rep. 90; (1935) 2 K. B. 282) Lord Justice Slesser stated that he did not think such general proposition could be disputed. There might, however, the learned Lord Justice intimated, be circumstances in a particular case which put a particular duty on a person and made him liable for negligence. Apart from the case of an animal of known vicious propensities, a person might, in Lord Justice Greer's words in Sycamore v. Ley (147 L. T. Rep. 342), "be liable for the conduct of a dog which has not been taken out of the category of tame animals if he puts it in such a position and in such circumstances as to render it likely that the dog will get excited, will lose its temper, and will cause damage to people lawfully passing along the highway."

The important words in this excerpt in regard to the point now in consideration are, "if he puts it in such a position and in such circumstances..." In Deen v. Davies (sup.) it was held that where the owner of a quiet horse, after riding it to a town, fastened it to a stable insecurely, and the animal got loose and, while trying to make its way home, injured a pedestrian, the owner was liable in damages. If the defendant had turned his horse into a field while he was pursuing his lawful occupation in the town, or the horse had escaped on to the highway through a gap in the hedge or an open gate, and had damaged the plaintiff, the defendant would not, according to Lord Justice Romer, have been liable. The reason for this will be sufficient by clear from the cases to which reference has been made.

But there was, the learned Lord Justice said, another series of cases where the court had to deal with the position of the owner of an animal which he himself had brought on the highway and which, having been so brought, damaged somebody else who was lawfully using the highway. In examining those cases it was very necessary to draw a distinction (similar to that which we have already observed in the other series of cases) between two different matters. First whether the owner of such an animal owed any duty at all to the public, and, secondly, whether, if he did owe such a duty, he had committed a breach of it; because if he did owe a duty to take all reasonable care that the animal which he had brought on to the highway did not damage other parties, what was reasonable care in one case might not be reasonable in another. It would be found in some cases that where a man had brought an animal on to the highway he had been held liable for damage caused to another party, and in other cases that he had not been held liable. "As I read those cases," Lord Justice Romer continued, "bearing that distinction again in mind, it had been clearly established that the owner of an animal who brings it on to the highway does owe a duty to those who are using the highway to use all reasonable care to prevent the animal damaging other persons. What may be reasonable care in the country may not be reasonable care in the town. What may be reasonable care in the case of one animal may not be reasonable care in the case of another."

In the case referred to at the outset of the present article; Ludlam v. W. E. Peel and Sons, which was reported in The Times of October 10th, the plaintiff was driving his car along the highway when he met six cows belonging to the defendants. The cows were in charge of a drover, and when the plaintiff first saw them were on the grass verge at the roadside. When the plaintiff was a few yards from them, one of them suddenly ran out in front of his car and a collision occurred. The county court judge awarded damages, holding that it was the duty of the owner of cattle which were driven on the highway to control them, and that it was not necessary to prove actual negligence on the part of the drover, but sufficient that the owner had caused them to be on the highway and had failed to keep them under proper control.

In the Court of Appeal Lord Justice Slesser adverted to the importance of the case to farmers, as well as to drivers of motor cars. The county court judge had not found any specific act of negligence on the part of the drover. The view that such act was not necessary seemed to have been taken by Lord Moncrieff in Harpers v. Great North of Scotland Railway Company (13 R. 1139), but that was not the view of the majority of the court in that case. In the present case, the county court judge was wrong in coming to the conclusion that it was not necessary to show any act of negligence on the part of the drover. It was true that the position where an animal was brought on to the highway was different from that where an animal strayed on to the highway (Deen v. Davies (sup.)) but in the present case there was no evidence that the owners of the cows, who had employed a competent drover, had failed to take reasonable care. The county court judge had sought to impose an absolute duty which did not exist in law, and his decision was accordingly reversed.—L. T.

Old Scots Judges

In these days of Sturm und Drang, and the excitement which follows from them, it is with a sense of relief that one turns to the stories of some of the occupants of the old Scots Bench who were certainly noted for their outspoken remarks, usually given forth in the broadest of broad Scots. Happily, Sir Walter Scott, himself, it will be borne in mind, a member of the Scots Bar and a sheriff (a functionary who, it is necessary to remember, is a judicial personage corresponding to some extent to a county court judge with us, but with a considerably wider jurisdiction in civil proceedings, and with jurisdiction in criminal cases also), lived at a time when the Scots Bench was manned by a number of men of undoubted legal capacity and with the accompaniment of a power of graphic expression which their successors would never dream of emulating. Another point of difference between the Scots judges and their southern confreres is in the titles they bear, each being entitled to be described as "Lord" so-and-so. This does not necessarily mean that they are peers; one or two of them have been ennobled, but the title is with most of them a mere courtesy description. Their wives, moreover, are not, as such, entitled to the appellation of "Lady." Apparently, however, some of these ladies in the early days were inclined, not unnaturally, to claim the title "Lady" an assumption, which was soon repelled by James V., the sovereign who founded the College of Justice, he declaring with some acerbity, "I made the carles lords, but who the devil made the carlines ladies?" He might, however, have extended the royal courtesy by giving the wives the corresponding title, as more than once it has led to some awkward questioning when, for example, Lord Fountainbridge is observed to be travelling with, say, Mrs. Smith—the name "Smith" being the judge's patronymic, which he uses in signing documents. Our Scots friends have apparently become quite accustomed to this curious feature in judges' titles.

Scots Judges' Other Titles

As has just been recalled, the old Scots judges almost invariably chose their judicial titles from the estates they owned or with which they were in some way connected; but there is an additional distinction in the descriptions they bear in the reports. As is generally known, the Court of Session—the supreme tribunal for civil causes in Scotland—consists of what is known as the Inner House and the Outer House. The former is for the most part an appellate court, while the Outer House consists of several courts each presided over by one of the Lords of Session, who, as taking cases of first instance, is officially known as a Lord Ordinary. It may not seem to be a very dignified title to confer upon these Outer House judges, but a long-established usage has accustomed the Scots people, and particularly the Scots Legal Profession, to this nomenclature. Another term is in general use in Edinburgh in connection with the judges sitting singly as judges of first instance; they are described as sitting in “boxes”—their court rooms being so small as really to merit this somewhat disparaging appellation—an analogy, however, being furnished by the sportsman in the north who speaks about his shooting “box.”

A Judicial Compliment to Scott

Readers and admirers of Scott's novels hardly need to be reminded of the frequency with which these are illustrated and lit up by some citation of the quaint old laws of Scotland. Surely no greater compliment was paid to Scott in the eyes of the public than the pleasing incident that occurred in the court where he was sitting as clerk when Lord Gillies, in the case of Thom v. Black (7 Shaw 158), quoted with judicial approval the doctrine of Monkbarne on the origin of imprisonment for civil debt in Scotland, which, however whimsical it may appear to the lay reader, was admitted by the learned Lord in question to be technically accurate.—L. T.

Dangerous Ambiguities.

Mr. Registrar Owen White recently wrote to a newspaper which had reported him as having said at Whitechapel County Court that solicitors did their work in a slipshod way, to point out that his remarks referred to some solicitors only and not to all. It is always well to be careful how you put any observations about the profession. Once at the Glamorgan Assizes a defendant was asked with regard to his legal advisers: “Were they not a respectable firm of solicitors?” He replied: “Yes, as solicitors go.” To his discomfort Mr. Justice Field angrily turned on him expressing surprise at hearing such a remark from a man of position and intelligence. The witness said it was a slip of the tongue, and the Judge warned him not to let his tongue slip in future, adding: “I have been a solicitor myself.” That revelation added fervour to the culprit's apology.

Making Amends.

Even judges have been known to utter in hasty moments generalisations, the natural meaning of which tended to reflect unfavourably on individuals. Mr. Maurice Healy, K. C., in his charming book of reminiscences, gives a splendid example of such an incident and the way to make amends for it. As a young man he defended a prisoner tried at the Kerry Assizes on a charge of highway robbery. Though the witnesses for the defence all appeared to be superior and honourable people, old Chief Baron Palles was strongly convinced of the guilt of the accused. His summing-up was full of scorn and indignation, and in the course of it he said: “When I was at the Bar there were counsel strong enough, aye, and honourable enough to say: ‘I will not put such witnesses in the box to commit perjury!’” He then virtually directed an acquittal and forgot all about what he had said. During the adjournment someone pointed out to him the implications of his words, and immediately on returning to court he addressed Healy: “I have been told that this morning I used words which might be understood as imputing dishonourable conduct to you. As dishonour is a word that I am sure I could never properly associate with your name I have sent for you to express my regret with the same publicity as attached to my error.—S. J.”

"Take heed lest, in escaping one pit, ye fall into another." If that bit of sage counsel, instead of having been addressed by Plato, circa 374 B. C., to his young disciples in reference to rival systems of philosophy, were given by a lawyer to local authorities, bankers, shopkeepers and divers others in the year 1939, in relation to sandbags, it would be a timely warning.

There is no more common sight in these dismal days, and no more frequent obstacle to pedestrian progress in these darkened nights—at any rate in London and the larger provincial towns—than piles of sandbags. They deploy themselves, in many instances, for three or four feet of the five or six-foot pavements. In the daytime those who go on their lawful occasions along those pavements may, with the exercise of ordinary care, avoid contact with those unsightly objects. But, "watchman, what of the night?" Even with the illicit flashing of a torch to "escape" the "pit" a pedestrian stands a very good chance of a violent acquaintance with one or more of them.

By what manner of right has the precious freedom of passage along the highway been filched from the citizen? Is there any such right? In the engulfing spate of legislation—Acts, Rules, Regulations and Orders—there may lurk some show of authority. The writer knows of none.

If any person "shall in any way wilfully obstruct the free passage of any highway" he is guilty of an offence (Highway Act, 1835, sec. 72). "Highway" includes a foot-path (Dennis v. Good, 83 J. P. 110).

Apart from and in the absence of express statutory authority, the urgency of the need in the emergency created by the war may be some reason for that "winking" by the police which, according to one learned judge, is the attribute of a prudent constable. Perhaps another is the fact that most, if not all, police stations are partly embroidered by the same sandy safeguards. And, on the assumption that those responsible for the obstructions are allowed, in the presence of a common danger, to protect their property in this way, is their immunity complete?

Although having the lawful right to do the work, a surveyor was convicted of wilful obstruction for leaving large stones on a road under repair without sufficient light at night (Fearnley v. Ormsby, 4 C. P. D. 136; 27 W. R. 823).

Ought the constructors, then, to light these obstructions? If they do, they offend against a specific and recent enactment. "No person shall, during the hours of darkness, cause or permit any light, not being a light in a roofed building, closed vehicle or other covered enclosure, to be displayed" (Lighting (Restrictions) Order, 1939, dated September 1, S. R. & O., 1939, No. 1093). And "person" includes a corporation (Interpretation Act, 1889, sec. 19).

It would seem that the cautious citizen is involved in the anomalous position that he is silently "permitted" to commit, without punishment, the offence of wilfully obstructing the highway, and is expressly forbidden to place any light upon that obstruction thereby to reduce the chances of injury to a pedestrian.

It is the statutory duty of local authorities to provide shelters in case of air-raids. This duty has been generally, and expensively, observed. And in the result another series of obstructions has been brought upon the highways. These, too, are unlighted at night—in pursuance of the Order (supra). Unlighted also are great numbers of refuges, bollards and other "nuisances" attendant and consequent upon the regulation of road traffic.

What are the liabilities of local authorities ties and the rights of citizens in relation to personal injuries due to the lack of light on these excrescences?

"If persons acting under statutory powers interfere with a highway, they must exercise due care to see that their works, while in progress, are so carried on, and, when completed, are so maintained, that the public are not injured thereby". (Holliday v. National Telephone Co. (1899, 2 Q. B. 392, C. A., and see other authorities set out in Halsbury, Hailsham edn., vol. 16, p. 363).

In Polkinghorn v. Lambeth Borough Council (1938, 1 All E. R., at p. 339) it was held that the defendant council, having erected the refuge and bollards, were under a continuing duty to keep them adequately lighted; and in Skilton v. Epsom and Ewell Urban District Council (1936, 2 All. E. R., at p. 50) that a local authority is under obligation to maintain an artificial work—in that case a traffic stud—brought by them upon a highway.

If, as appears to be the case, the Lighting Order (supra) relieves a local authority of the duty of adequately lighting a roadway obstruction for which they are responsible—indeed, makes the discharge of that duty an offence—then their liability to protect, so far as possible, the users of the roads against danger only persists, in this regard, during the daytime (when those users are better able to protect themselves) and ceases with the coming of darkness (when they have the greater need of such protection).

If this be the case, local authorities are in a happier position than those persons who bring similar, or other, obstructions upon the highway. The former have a legal right to place sandbag and other obstacles upon the highway, and are forbidden to illuminate them at night. But the latter have no such right. And if a motorist comes into violent contact with, for example, a bollard on refuge, at night, he would have no right of action against the local highway authority—for there would be no negligence; but the discharge of a dual duty. A pedestrian, however, who suffered personal injury through running into an unlighted sandbag obstacle on the pavement erected by the frontager would, apparently, have a claim for damages. The immunity of the local authority, however, would only extend (so far as sandbagging is concerned) to the protective works done under statutory authority, e. g., air-raid shelters. There is no such authority for protecting their town halls and other buildings—and in this respect they would be on the same footing as citizens in relation to claims for damages.

There is still another queer aspect of the sandbag difficulties. Against public offices, telephone kiosks, unemployment exchanges, post offices and other Government buildings there are serried rows of high-reaching bags of sand. No injury resulting from their presence would entitle an injured person to damages. A petition of right does not lie against the Crown in respect of a claim founded upon tort, because the Crown can do no wrong (Tobin v. R., 1864, 16 C. B. N. S. 310), nor for compensation for a wrongful act done by a servant of the Crown in the supposed performance of his duty (ibid).—L. J.

Legal Practitioner and Money-lending

The question whether the advances of loans made by an Advocate do amount to engagement in money-lending so as to amount to professional misconduct on the part of the Advocate, came before a Bench of the Allahabad High Court (41 Or. L. J. 211). Agreeing with the dictum of Mac Cardie in (1906) 1 K. B. 205, their Lordship held that the answer must depend on the facts of the particular case. As was the case here, a man does not become a money-lender by reason of occasional loans to relations, friends or acquaintances, whether interest be charged or not. The line of demarcation cannot be defined with closeness. It is a mixed question of fact and law. In 52 Ind. Cas. 638 (F. B.) the same High Court held that an element of continuity and habit is essential to constitute the exercise of a profession or business. Where it is found that money-lending transactions are numerous, continuous and systematic, the Advocate must be held to have entered into money-lending business. In this respect, the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in 8 Ind. Cas. 677 was also referred. Finding it difficult to formulate a hard and fast rule as to what does and what does not constitute a money-lending business, their Lordships accepted the finding of the Bar Tribunal in favour of the Advocate. Such matter, it was remarked, concerns the Bar Council and therefore the High Court ordinarily accepts the findings on question of fact recorded by the Bar Tribunal, provided, the findings are not perverse.

—Warning.

Before parting with the case, their Lordships rightly administered a warning to the learned profession. They observed that it is in the interest of the Advocates themselves that before making advances by way of loan, they should obtain the previous sanction of the Bar Council and of the High Court. It may be that in a particular case half a dozen advances made during a particular period may not be held to amount to engagement in money-lending business, but seven advances by way of loan made during the same period may be held to amount to engagement in money-lending.

Cruelty to Animals

There is no limit how far human ingenuity will go to acquire profits. In some parts of India, there is a practice amongst the milk-sellers to inflict a kind torture to cows and buffalos to make them yield more milk. This practice is generally known as phooka. It consists in thrusting a long bag or a cotton plug containing some irritant matter into the urinary-passage of the animal. In this way by applying internal pressure the animal is forced to give more milk. This instrument is sometimes 24 inches in length and 9 inches in circumference at end and tapering off to an ordinary rope at the other. To make the animal submit, she is often mercilessly beaten. Another method of phooka, as the name signifies, is to blow air into the urinary passage and then insert the plug. It is really high time that such revolting practices should be abolished by propaganda and legal machinery.

—Punishment.

Only recently a case came before the A. D. M. of Amritsar. The offender was found to have tortured a she-buffalo day after day, for nearly two months since her calf had died. He was apprehended, while in the act of applying phooka, by the local agents of the S. P. C. A. The offender was let off with a mere fine of Rs. 25. We do not know under what act he was convicted. But we respectfully consider that the punishment was much too insignificant considering the nature of the offence. Perhaps the learned Magistrate might have taken into account other circumstances of the case, while awarding the sentence. We, however, feel that in such cases, the conviction should be as severe as possible, so as to act as deterrent to others, and also to make the practice of phooka unprofitable.

Notice Under S. 107, Criminal Procedure Code

A Full Bench of the Madras High Court consisting of three Judges considered an important point of law, having bearing on the scope and construction of s. 107, Criminal P. C. (In re Methuswami Chettiyar and others, 185 Ind. Cas. 824). The question was whether the information and the evidence on which a Magistrate can act under s. 107 must relate a breach of the peace or wrongful act in contemplation at the time when such information is given to the Magistrate. Leach, C. J. who delivered the judgment of the Bench explained the Case-law relied on by the petitioner and held that the action under s. 112 constituted a judicial act and the Magistrate, therefore, should not act in an arbitrary manner. There must be information of a nature which would convince him that there is likelihood of a breach of the peace. The learned Chief Justice, however, held that it was impossible to formulate any rule with regard to the nature of the information on which a Magistrate should act. The question would depend on the particular situation. His Lordship while agreeing that there must be something more than the past misconduct of the person proceeded against to justify a notice being served upon him, held that the Code did not require the information to show the particular act which was in contemplation at the time. While enunciating this principle of law, His Lordship relied on the case reported in 47 Ind. Cas. 72 and incidentally remarked that where the notice issued did not comply with the requirements of s. 112, the High Court could quash the proceeding. Our respectful comment on this is that the construction put on the scope of the section is in keeping with the general theme of the preventive and precautionary proceedings mentioned in the Code. If the scope of the section is restricted in a manner suggested, it would impair its practical usefulness as a provision authorising preventive proceedings being instituted against persons, who, in the opinion of the Magistrate, are likely to disturb public tranquillity. The fear that such a wide construction might have the effect of turning the section into weapon of oppression in the hands of the magistracy is ill-founded.

Is an "Armed Merchant Ship" Legal?

The capture of enemy merchant ships on the high seas is a long-established right of belligerents, and is, in fact, an essential part of sea warfare and blockade. If, however, a merchant ship is captured, its passengers and crew must be placed in safety. This is the first obligation of a captor, and it has been clearly laid down that open boats cannot be regarded as a place of safety unless very close to the shore and in favourable weather.

During the last war the first German attack on British maritime trade was made by surface raiders.

They captured ships, often as much in order to renew their own supplies as to damage our sea-borne trade, but they were scrupulous with regard to the safety of crews. The submarine, by her very nature, is seldom capable of ensuring the safety of the crew of a merchant ship which she may sink. Nor can a submarine capture a merchant ship unless that submarine belongs to a navy having command of the sea, for a submarine cannot carry prize crews.

It was on February 1st, 1917, that Germany embarked upon unrestricted submarine warfare.

In a few weeks the whole world was horrified, not so much at the ship losses, as at the ruthless sacrifice of non-combatants' lives. Small wonder that for years after the war diplomats and jurists sought to prevent the repetition of such ruthlessness.

The result was the Submarine Protocol, which laid down very clearly that a submarine must abide by international law particularly as regards placing the crews of her merchant ship victims in a place of safety. This international agreement was freely and unconditionally subscribed to by Germany.

Strict adherence to the Submarine Protocol would have made submarine warfare against sea-borne trade impossible on any great scale.

That Germany had no intention of adhering strictly to her obligation was proved by the fact that German submarines were already stationed on the ocean trade routes before Germany forced Europe into war.

Some German submarine captains endeavoured to honour their obligations to the laws of humanity, but others did not. That Germany herself was ashamed of the most glaring of these breaches of International Law—the sinking of the Athenia—is clear from the childish efforts of the Germany Propaganda Ministry to disclaim German responsibility for the sinking of this passenger liner without warning.

An instance of the value of German claims was the recent announcement that the North Sea is controlled by the German Navy. If it were, it would surely be a better policy to take neutral ships into harbour for examination instead of sinking them without warning or provision for the safety of their crews.

Now Germany threatens the even more ruthless prosecution of the U-boat war on commerce. As an excuse, Germany cites the defensive arming of the British merchant ships.

So far from being an excuse, this is putting the cart before the horse. The defensive arming of merchant ships—which is in accordance with International Law—is only made necessary by unrestricted submarine warfare in defiance of International Law.
